Mrs. Byrd.
Congratulations.
400 Degrees Below.
Our Strange Minds.
MacDonald Knows America.

—By ARTHUR BRISBANE—

MRS. RICHARD EVELYN BYRD, of Virginia, is a proud mother. One of her sons is Governor of his state. Another is a most able scientific farmer. The third son has just flown over the South Pole.

Before that he had flown around and over the North Pole, and across the Atlantic Ocean.

THE President and all the world extend congratulations to Commander Byrd. This column on behalf of a good many readers sends congratulations on her three fine sons to Mrs. Byrd. Whatever her sons have done, she did, for she made them.

TEMPERATURE is 12 degrees above zero in New York where this was written, with two reported killed by the cold, 11 dead elsewhere in the country. More than 1,000 men and women applied for shelter on the Bowery, an unusual number.

But we should not complain. A few miles over our heads, above the atmosphere, it is always more than 400 degrees below zero.

THERE is also comfort in the knowledge that our sun is not growing cold. Using energy at the present frightful rate, it would take at least 156,000 years for the sun's heat to diminish by 3 per cent.

Long before the year 151,929 men will have learned how to distribute surplus equatorial heat to the North and South Poles, controlling the temperature of the earth as we control that of a modern hotel.

And, if necessary, we may tap heat stored up in the earth's center.

STRANGE are the workings of the human mind. Berlin has a morphinist's club, where men gather for the use of morphine and seek to add to the number of addicts.

If there is no real hell, that is a pretty good imitation.

IN TOKIO the Japanese Minister to China, home on leave, commits suicide.

Distressed by the loss of his wife, the unfortunate man, Sadao Saburi, had assumed his posthumous Buddhist's name, usually taken only after death, and had it written on a tombstone for his wife and himself. Thereafter he asked his friends to assume that he was a ghost.

Since his wife was dead, he also was dead.

THE constitution will not allow anybody not born in the United States to be president. Otherwise, if Ramsay MacDonald should tire of his job in Britain, he might make a good presidential candidate here.

He understands what this country wants, and understands George Washington's policy better than some American presidents have understood either. The presence of Mr. Kellogg, formerly our secretary of state, and king of the United States, MacDonald said:

"They certainly are not going to co-operate with us as to be bound by formal ties, but certainly are not going to admit themselves to European policy and mix themselves in European messes. The president of the United States is going to go back on their wise traditional policy of keeping out of European messes."

Let us hope Mr. MacDonald will prove a good prophet, and the United States will never feel that it must entrust to a European league or a European court decisions that this country, thus far, has been able to take for itself.

From Archangel, in Northern Russia, 75 American soldiers are brought from their temporary shallow graves to be buried at home.

Those dead bodies emphasized the stupidity that sent Americans to be killed in Russia, on a quarrel not ours.

They should remind this government to keep the United States out of some other unnecessary European complications.

On another occasion, Americans would not consent so readily to being shipped for slaughter wherever a whim might send them.

Northcliffe said "The Americans are a very docile people." He should have added "But not twice in succession."

YOUNG men, and women, interest yourselves in gliding. William B. Mayo, Henry Ford's chief engineer, says: "Gliding is a safe method of learning to fly; a glider can be purchased for a few hundred dollars, and gliding in itself is a delightful and thrilling sport."

The National Glider Association, organized to promote navigation of the air without engines, will do a great deal to build up flying by adding to the number of fliers.

BONAPARTE, representing the youth of the French Revolution that did not believe in God or anything much above the earth's surface, went marching through Italy and Austria, taking what pleased him.

HE TOOK from the Ambrosian Library, in Milan, priceless manuscripts of Leonardo Da Vinci, property of the Pope.

Now at the Pope's request, the Institute of France returns the manuscripts.

IT IS to be hoped they will be published. Perhaps they say something about Christopher Columbus who "sailed the ocean

MERCURY TO HOVER NEAR ZERO MARK

Benumbed Man Stumbles Onto Railroad Track, Meets Death; Two Die in Fire.

Find Fourth Victim Frozen; Woman Rescued From Sick Bed as Fire Sweeps Home.

With prospect of only slight abatement Sunday, the record cold gripping Pittsburgh and its environs had left a trail of four dead, families forced from burning homes, bedfast persons rescued and widespread suffering.

Two young brothers lost their lives when flames destroyed their home at 611 Sweetbriar street.

David Hickey, 56, of 3206 Huxley street, was found dead from exposure in the doorway of 1204 Webster avenue.

Overcome by the intense cold, Peter Istvan, 45, of Munhall, stumbled onto railroad tracks and was killed by a passenger train.

One woman was assisted from her sick bed and two children were rescued when fire damaged an apartment at 6356 March-and street.

Forecaster W. S. Brotzman predicted a temperature of from five to 10 degrees Saturday night, with slowly rising mercury Sunday.

The bodies of Edward Williams, 12, and his brother, Frederick, 10, were recovered early Saturday from the ruins of their home by firemen who battled for two hours in zero weather to extinguish the blazing two-story frame dwelling at 611 Sweetbriar street.

The father, George Williams, 33, an elevator operator, was seriously burned rescuing his two other children, Margaret, 7, and Marian, 4.

RESCUE EFFORT FAILS

Williams made a valiant effort to save his two sons, but was beaten back by smoke and flame from the burning stairway.

Frederick Williams, owner, with his son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. John Bottles, were compelled to flee their quarters on

London-to-India Mail Plane Wrecks

HOECEST-ON-MAIN, Germany, Nov. 30.—(INS.)—A trimotored British mail plane, "Geboc," bound from London to India, was forced down near here today by darkness and bad weather.

The plane was so badly damaged that it will be necessary to dismantle it and ship it back to London by rail and boat, but none of the crew of four was injured. There were no passengers aboard the plane.

U.S. Prosperity Up to People, Forbes Asserts

HERE is the first of a series of interpretative articles explaining the effect of the Hoover business uplift conferences at the White House.

B. C. Forbes

The Hearst newspapers have asked a group of widely-known economists to outline what they see as the result of the presidential summoning of captains of industry, farm and labor heads to Washington.

The immediate future of the United States is predicted in this series of articles. It is of vital importance to every citizen of the United States.

By B. C. FORBES.
Universal Service.

NORMALCY means prosperity in America. Let us all act normally.

President Hoover has nobly done his part to insure continued prosperity. Industrial leaders, utility leaders, agricultural leaders, labor leaders, have pledged themselves to do theirs.

But to crown the movement with genuine success, you and I and every other consumer must do ours. If we stop spending, prosperity will stop and unemployment take its place.

Up to People

The national well-being is in our own hands.

Shall we act normally or abnormally, wisely or foolishly? Shall we bring on hard times for all or keep prosperity by keeping on?

Not more than three per cent, probably, of our population has sustained personal stock market losses.

That unvarnished truth contrasts with widespread loose talk about "everybody" having been caught in the market's debacle. In nine cases out of 10, investors' losses have been, in Wall Street parlance, "paper losses." Nine out of every 10 investors who owned securities before the deflation still own them, and these investors, taken as a whole, are receiving larger incomes on their money than they received during the stock boom—the number of corporations and companies announcing enlarged disbursements to stockholders lately has exceeded all precedent; and the total will be substantially extended before New Year's.

Innocents Hurt Worst

Calm analysis reveals the chief sufferers have been margin speculators, men and women who had no business to join in the speculative orgy. Many of them became so innoculated with the speculative germ that they feverishly followed the stock ticker and neglected their regular daily duties. The country will be gainer, not loser, by the return of these ill-advised individuals to their legitimate duties. It is worth all that it has cost to dispel the far-spread delusion that the royal road to wealth was via Wall Street and to drive the misguided back to old-fashioned principles.

Just as the insane boom created mental derangement, so its

DISAPPEARS AT MIDNIGHT FROM ROOMING HOUSE

Police and Private Detectives Launch Hunt for Texan Betrothed to N. Y. Girl.

Mysteriously missing from his rooming house, Walter V. Cunningham, 25, of Dalhart, Tex., a student at Carnegie Institute of Technology, is the subject of an intensive search by police and private detectives here.

Cunningham was last seen shortly after midnight Tuesday when he went to his room in a boarding house at 3515 Forbes street, apparently to retire.

About two hours later the light still was burning in the room.

STUDENT VANISHES

Repeated knocking at his door failed to elicit any response. The door to his room was forced open, and it was discovered that he was not there.

When he failed to return Wednesday the Missing Persons Bureau and relatives in Washington, Pa., were notified. The relatives engaged the Ray Detective Agency to assist in the search.

WORKING HIS WAY

Cunningham had been a night student at Tech since September, and was employed by the Eliza furnace, of Jones & Laughlin Steel Corporation.

He had studied at West Point Military Academy and had worked at Dundalk, Md., and in New York City.

He was engaged to marry Miss Florence E. Fife, of 139 West Ninety-fifth street, New York, relatives said.

He was described as 5 feet 10 inches tall, weighing about 150 pounds, sandy-haired, and with grayish green eyes.

Because he was a man of exemplary habits and devoted to his work and studies, relatives fear that he may have met with foul play.

Honduras Matches Wine Against Liquor

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras, Nov. 30.—(AP)—President Mejia Colindres, who has been actively working to encourage temperance in Honduras since taking office, today announced that he had contracted for Spanish experts to come here to cultivate grape vines on a large scale. He hopes the production of good native wine will encourage the people to turn from stronger alcoholic drinks.

Mont Pelee Active, Ashes Menace Town

FORT DE FRANCE, Nov. 30.—(AP.)—Mont Pelee, the volcano which has constantly threatened the northern end of the island for weeks, broke early today into fresh eruption which sent forth a series of showers of ash. Lava was forced out at an altitude of 4,000 meters and spread over eight kilometers toward the town of St. Pierre and the sea.

Irish, Middies Score Triumphs In Big Battles

THE University of Notre Dame football team finished its season undefeated Saturday when it conquered the United State Military Academy eleven in the Yankee Stadium, New York, before a crowd of 82,000. The score was 7 to 0. The only touchdown of the game came in the second period when Jack Elder, Notre Dame halfback, intercepted Chris Cagle's pass on the Notre Dame goal line and ran 99 yards for a touchdown.

The Naval Academy furnished the big upset of the day when it defeated Dartmouth in Philadelphia, 13 to 6. Detroit nosed out Georgetown, 14-13; Villanova defeated Temple, 15-0; Boston College defeated Holy Cross, 12-0, and Southern Methodists and Texas Christian battled to a 7-7 deadlock.

$1,000,000 FIRE IN W. VIRGINIA

PARKERSBURG, W. Va., Nov. 30.—(AP.)—Damage expected to total $1,000,000 was caused by a fire which destroyed a principle business block of Parkersburg tonight.

The blaze, which is believed to have started in the boiler room of the Camden Theater, closed between productions, gutted the entire block on Market street, between Seventh and Eighth avenues.

Fire departments from Spencer and Marietta, O., were called for assistance in combatting the flames. Additional apparatus was reported en route from St. Marys.

One fireman was injured by flying glass.

Sparks carried by the wind started another blaze when they fell on a residence five blocks north of the business section blaze.

Establishments burning included the Camden Theater, two dress shops, a clothing store, the Mountain State Business College, a shoe store, a variety store, a drug store, three millinery shops, an optometrist's office and a bakery.

Wife Prefers Prayer To Doing Housework

VIENNA, Nov. 30.—A Viennese husband was recently granted a divorce on the ground that his wife was "too pious," and neglected her husband and children in order to pray or attend church services. Neighbors testified that the wife refused to clean house or cook the meals.

The wife's defense was that she found it more useful to pray for her family than to attend to their material welfare.

1,360 Slain in 10-Year Attempt to Enforce National Prohibition

TODAY the Sun-Telegraph publishes the first of a series of articles summarizing the results of a nationwide survey made by the Washington Herald, a Hearst newspaper, into the prohibition enforcement fatalities during nearly 10 years of national prohibition. This survey, which has revealed many startling facts heretofore unpublished, has been conducted for the Herald by Cole E. Morgan, for many years a member of the Herald staff, and an accredited Washington correspondent for the Hearst newspapers. Five and one-half months have been devoted to this exhaustive research that has undertaken to go into every county and city of the United States. Another instalment of these startling revelations will appear next Sunday.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30.—Thirteen hundred and sixty men, women and children in their graves!

That is not the toll of a foreign massacre but a record of lives lost in attempts to force the Eighteenth Amendment on the people of the United States. It covers the period of almost 10 years, since national prohibition became a law on January 16, 1920.

These figures do not include the countless deaths resulting from gang wars, hi-jacking encounters, drink-crazed citizens and intoxicated drivers—the sanguinary spawn of the dry law. Nor do they include perhaps hundreds of other deaths in which agents of the dry law may have been involved but which have not been ferreted out.

These 1,360 deaths have been recorded definitely by the Washington Herald as those in which it is known that prohibition enforcement was directly at issue. In every case one or more sworn officers of the law or their agents were involved as principals, either as the killers or the killed.

Shotgun Prohibition

This is the story of "shotgun prohibition." It is shotgun coercion with a vengeance!

The Washington Herald has gathered these figures solely upon its own initiative. For five and a half months it canvassed the nation for facts.

It sent out more than 10,000 letters and questionnaires to Federal, state and county officials in every single county in the land.

It got replies from coroners, county clerks, sheriffs, prosecuting attorneys, medical examiners, city executives and chiefs of police.

It obtained facts from the files of newspapers, from daily news dispatches of nationwide press services and other sources of indisputable reliability.

Reports Voluntary

Not one cent was paid to any officials for their reports. The concluding paragraph in the Herald's letter to each stated:

"This canvass is not inspired by any organization or group on either side of this question."

The officials interrogated replied voluntarily. The simple facts they attested to were startling in their cold, blunt frankness, and would fill many pages of a newspaper.

They can be boiled down to one line, significant and damning in itself:

"Thirteen hundred and sixty men, women and children lost their lives through official attempts to enforce the dry law with the shotgun."

Figures Appalling

From time to time statements regarding the fatalities resulting from dry enforcement efforts have been uttered by anti-prohibition leaders, notably former Senator Edwards, of New Jersey; former Senator Bruce, of Maryland; Senator Tydings, of Maryland, and

TECH STUDENT DEATH BAFFLING

While the county chemist began his analysis in Carnegie Institute of Technology's campus poison mystery Saturday, the city detective homicide squad's investigation into the death of Paul Ott, 19, on the doorstep of Welsh Hall dormitory was at a standstill.

Questioning of six students by detectives failed to reveal anything which might throw light on the mysterious attack of illness which evidently drove the pajama-clad student into the zero weather shortly before 3 o'clock Saturday morning.

ILLNESS THEORY

Dr. William L. Marks, medical director at Tech, advanced the theory that Ott, suffering from an acute stomach ailment, had staggered out of his room on the first floor of the dormitory in an attempt to reach a telephone on the second floor. Reaching the landing between the first and second floors, Dr. Marks theorized, Ott probably felt faint and collapsed as he tried to steady himself in the doorway leading outdoors.

OLD GUARD QUITS VARE IN SENATE FIGHT

Republican Leaders Hoping To Place Appointment At Governor's Disposal.

Coalition Supporting Norris Plan to Put Democrat In Philadelphian's Place.

By FRASER EDWARDS
Universal Service.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30.—Old guard Republican leaders in the Senate today decreed that Senator-elect William S. Vare, of Pennsylvania, shall walk the political plank.

This decision was reached, apparently with the approval of President Hoover, in order to straighten out the much-muddled situation over Vare's seat in the Senate. It has a two-fold purpose.

First—It is designed to prevent the Democratic-Insurgent coalition from seating William B. Wilson, former secretary of labor, Vare's Democratic opponent.

Second—It will settle the question of a vacancy from Pennsylvania, permit Gov. John S. Fisher to appoint a man in place of Vare and allow Senator David A. Reed, of Pennsylvania, to go to London as a member of the American delegation to the Five-Power Naval Parley, without embarassment.

WATSON TO ASK DELAY

Senator James E. Watson, of Indiana, Republican leader, announced today that he will move to postpone action on the Vare case until after the Wilson-Vare contest has been decided. Under a demand recently made by Vare for a recount in 31 Pennsylvania counties of the votes cast in the senatorial election of 1926, the case would drag along for at least two months longer.

In the event the motion for a postponement fails, Watson will offer an amendment to the resolution by Senator Norris, of Nebraska, which holds that Vare is not entitled to a seat in the Senate. The amendment would provide that Vare's seat is vacant. This would permit the governor of Pennsylvania to make an appointment.

Democratic and Insurgent leaders are determined to dispose of the Vare case at this time. This means that there will be a majority against any proposal to defer action, as Watson desires.

VARE TO SPEAK

This same majority may be mustered to defeat the second Watson proposal, if the coalition leaders believe it would be a part of strategy. The outcome of this vote, however, still is in doubt.

Under the original Norris resolution, which denied Vare his seat pending the outcome of the Wil-

Niece of New Jersey Governor in Elopement

DOYLESTOWN, Pa., Nov. 30.—(INS.)—Another runaway marriage unexpectedly put Doylestown on the map again today as the Gretna Green of Pennsylvania.

Miss Eloise Catherine Larson, a niece of Gov. Morgan L. Larson, of New Jersey, and William Millman, of Washington's Crossing, were married here by the Rev. George M. Whitenack, Jr., of the Presbyterian Church.

The bride is a student at the New Jersey College for Women, New Brunswick, and Millman is a senior at Lafayette College, Easton, Pa.

Their marriage climaxed a summer courtship at the Governor's summer mansion in Sea Girt, N. J., where the bride served as hostess for her uncle. The romance began while Millman was serving in the Quartermasters Corps at New Jersey National Guard encampment.

The Governor, it is said, was unaware of the young couple's plans.

2 Girls Injured in Crash Of Stolen Auto and Trolley

Two girls were injured, one seriously, in a collision Saturday night, between an automobile, reported stolen, and a Carson street car near the Castle Shannon incline in Carson street. The driver of the machine fled and police are searching for him.

The injured girls are: Jennie Weaver, 21, of 37 Independence street, South Side, and Florence Unger, 18, of 25 Gibson street, Elliot. Miss Weaver is suffering from cuts about the head and face, and Miss Unger has a probable fractured skull. They are in South Side Hospital.

Police were unable to question the girls because of their injuries. Witnesses reported they were passengers in the machine which had been reported stolen by John Prolyn, of 304 Wood street, several hours prior to the accident. The car was taken, according to Prolyn, from its parking place at Shady avenue and Shakespeare street, East End.

Clemenceau's Will Reveals Only Fear in Tiger's Life

FEARED SCIENCE WOULD DESIRE BODY AND BRAIN

Motive Behind Hatred Bared; Disclosed Ghosts to Grave Untouched, Unembalmed

International News Service

PARIS, Nov. 30.—Georges Clemenceau, who [illegible] without a tremor of fear [illegible] political [illegible] three-quarters [illegible] age to his death fear that [illegible] would be ransacked by [illegible] after life had departed from him.

Details of the [illegible] will, which was [illegible] for the first time [illegible] the magazine [illegible] were learned exclusively by International News Service [illegible]. Among other things they reveal Clemenceau's fear that his body would be [illegible] by scientists wishing to learn the secret of longevity and [illegible] the versatile genius by examination of his brain.

ORBIDS EXAMINATION

In a holograph testament written in a strong, virile hand in pen and ink France's war-time premier stipulated that his body remain absolutely undisturbed after death. He forbade any attempts to remove his heart, dissect his brain or perform post-mortem examinations of any sort.

It was this order that resulted in the aged statesman's body being rushed to its modest burial place in the south of France in the dead of night, a few hours after he had passed away.

Clemenceau had known and read of brilliant men like himself who donated their bodies to science after death, and such treatment apparently held terrors for him.

He knew that his amazing virility and mental genius through his long life had been a marvel to the world, and whether his fears were justified or not, he was afraid the inquisitive might attempt to experiment upon him.

BODY NOT EMBALMED

Thus his body went to a humble grave, unembalmed and untouched.

In addition the testament confirmed Clemenceau's now well-known and gratified wishes for the simplest possible burial, and stipulated the articles he wished placed inside his coffin.

One was the cane of lignum-vitae he had carried in his youth. Another was a simple souvenir of the World War—a vase wrought from an exploded German shell, filled with withered flowers plucked from a spot on the battlefield which had escaped bullet and shrapnel. It was given to Clemenceau by a poilu on one of his many visits to the trenches during the war.

There was another touch of tender sentiment. The will revealed Clemenceau's hitherto unmentioned desire for the inhumation of "a little goatskin box containing a book from my dear mama." The will directed that the box would be found [illegible] on the upper shelf of my wardrobe."

Clemenceau was determined that no alterations should be made in the way he scratched out his testament on coarse paper with a sputtering pen. Around each hand-written page he inscribed a rough circle, indicating that it was complete and satisfactory, and that he desired no deletions or additions.

The testament devoted considerable space to the disposition of his property and the royalties accruing from his published works.

sprawling on the cement steps where he was found by Matthew G. Fairchild, of Monterey, Mexico, who was visiting Fred Latham, another resident of the dormitory.

A post-mortem examination performed at the morgue by Coroner's Physician J. W. McMeans, it was said, revealed the cause of death as "acute gastro enteritis," which might have resulted either from ptomaine poisoning or a poison administered directly. The nature of the poisoning will not be known until the completion of the chemical analysis, which will require from three to four days, according to attaches of the coroner's office.

KITCHEN EXAMINED

Detective Sergeant Samuel Wheeler, of the homicide squad, and Chief Clerk James L. Davidson, of the coroner's office, accompanied by Ott's uncle, George N. McDonald, of 1236 Squirrel Hill avenue, conducted an exhaustive search of the youth's room Saturday afternoon in the hope of uncovering something which might shed light upon the mystery. They examined pots and pans in the kitchen where the students prepare meals and they closely examined a metal pot in which young Ott is supposed to have prepared coffee a few hours before he was found dying, but they revealed nothing. Neither did they find any other trace of food or poison in the student's room.

The uncle told detectives his nephew, whose home is in Baltimore, spent Thanksgiving at his home.

"He was in good spirits and, apparently, the best of health," Mr. McDonald declared.

SPELLS OF DIZZINESS

Several times within the past two months, Ott's fellow-students told detectives, the youth had complained of spells of "dizziness" and twice in this period, they said, Ott had consulted a physician.

Dr. Marks revealed that on November 23 Ott had applied for an excuse for not taking part in compulsory gymnastic classes at the institution. Dr. Marks said he gave Ott the excuse without putting him through the usual physical examination.

Mother Collapses Over Student's Death

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 30.—Mrs. Katherine Ott, of 718 East Thirty-third street, this city, collapsed today upon learning of her son, Paul's, mystrious death in Pittsburgh.

She is under the care of a physician.

At the home here it was learned that the Carnegie Tech student's body will be brought back Sunday by an uncle, George N. McDonald, of Pittsburgh.

BANDITS FLEE WITH PAYROLL

Police are seeking three young men, a small car, and $1,488 after the hold-up of F. E. Pickering, 43, manager of the White Linen Supply Company, Saturday, in front of the company's plant at 4928 Cypress street.

Pickering, trying to park his car after returning from the East End Savings and Trust Company shortly before noon, found his path blocked. When he stepped out to see why, two youths pushed revolvers against his body and demanded the payroll.

Unable to get help, the manager gave up the money. The youths stepped into a small coupe. A companion had stayed at the wheel. Neighbors who saw the car as it sped away said the license number was 219,932.

While Pickering was able to give a thorough description of the two holdup men, the third, who drove the car, was unidentified. The armed youths were reported to detectives as being good-looking and well dressed.

The payroll was for the employes of the linen house, approximately 30 young women. The money was insured, Pickering said.

New Receiver Denied For Foshay Company

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 30.—(AP.)—Federal Judge John B. Sanborn today denied stockholders' petitions for appointment of a new receiver and attorneys for the Public Utilities Consolidated Corporation, A. W. Foshay holding company and for permission to examine books and accounts of the firm.

In denying permission to examine the company's books, Judge Sanborn said the stockholders would be given opportunity for such action on completion of the formal audits now being made. Such an examination now, he said, would interfere with the progress of the audits.

CHILLING WAVE SWEEPS NATION

Associated Press.

The first severe cold wave of the season, which has swept over the United States from the Rocky Mountains to the Atlantic seaboard and from the Northwest far down into the heart of Dixie entered upon its third day today.

Freezing weather, and in some sections, sub-zero temperatures and heavy snow were reported in all parts of the country except the far Southwestern and extreme Southern states and the Pacific coast.

Stiff, bitter gales accompanied the cold wave along the Atlantic coast and the entire East had its first general sub-freezing weather. Snow fell as far south as Virginia.

Icy blasts descended into parts of the Southern states and unseasonably low temperatures were registered in Georgia, Arkansas and the Carolinas.

The thermometer continued to point to below zero marks in some of the Central states and the Northwest. Shipping was impaired on the Great Lakes because of ice and blizzards.

Intense suffering was reported in the larger cities among the homeless and impoverished.

With freezing weather in most all other sections of the country, the Pacific coast states reported a remarkable contrast with mild, dry weather. A water shortage is acute along the entire coast.

the first floor. The building was destroyed.

The body of a man found dead from the cold in a hallway at 1204 Webster avenue, Saturday, was later identified at the morgue as that of David Hickey, 56, of 3206 Huxley street. Identification was made by his brother, James H. Hickey, a city fireman.

DAZED MAN KILLED

Dazed by the intense cold, Peter Istvan, 45, of Munhall, wandered onto railroad tracks at Sixth avenue and Amity street, Homestead, early Saturday and was killed by a passenger train of the Pennsylvania Railroad, the coroner reported.

Miss Helen Elliott was assisted from her sick bed on the third floor of 6356 Marchand street to safety Saturday when fire damaged the three-story brick structure.

Mrs. Sybil O'Neill, occupant of the second floor, carried out her two children, Aline, 3, and Rae, 3 months, and also aided in rescuing Miss Elliott. The building was damaged $1,500, firemen estimated.

Ice was chopped from a creek to provide a water supply for firemen of Bridgeville, Glendale, Bower Hill and Kirwin, who battled a fire that destroyed the home of Rudolph Kovacic at Presto, causing $3,000 loss. Five of the Kovacic family were taken in by neighbors.

Ill with diphtheria on the second floor of a three-story frame dwelling at 309 Renfrew street, Edward Stewart, 12, Negro, was carried safely to the home of a neighbor early Saturday. Floyd Miles, Negro, occupant of the first floor, his wife and two children, were driven into the bitter cold. The fire started, firemen reported, when Mrs. Charles Stewart, an occupant, tried to thaw out a frozen water pipe. Damage was set at $2,000.

TEMPERATURE TO RISE

The mercury which Saturday rose slowly from a low record of 1 above at 8 a. m., reached a high of 14 at 4 p. m. Then there was a decline to between 5 and 10 degrees. This broke all cold weather records for the month of November since the weather bureau began keeping statistics in 1871.

Sunday will see the temperature rising slowly, followed by snow Sunday night, Brotzman said.

One family was forced to flee when an overheated furnace in the basement of a two-story apartment at 7346 Ormand street, Swissvale, caused a $4,000-fire Saturday night. Harry E. Wetmore, his wife and daughter, Kitty Lou, 3, and his sister, Orphie Wetmore, 14, were forced to flee. The second floor was vacant.

East Liberty Merchants Speed Teachers' Contest

East Liberty merchants have been busy in their stores for the city's most popular teacher. Keen interest in the campaign has been evident since its start Friday.

The plan of campaign, as told by Patrick Flood of the East Liberty Chamber of Commerce, is simple. With every 10-cent purchase at the store of any authorized East Liberty merchant, one ballot is given. This ballot may be cast by the customer for the teacher he prefers.

Authorized East Liberty merchants are those who are co-operating with the East Liberty Chamber in the contest. They have signs and posters on display establishing their identification.

It is not necessary to make two separate 10-cent purchases in order to obtain two votes. A 20-cent purchase brings two ballots, a 30-cent purchase, three.

There will be 15 Christmas gifts distributed to the 15 most popular teachers chosen. Each will be a deluxe model Philco radio, valued at over $200.

One teacher is to be chosen from each grade of the public, private and parochial schools.

49 MILLIONS IN CITY-COUNTY 1930 PROGRAM

$14,000,000 for Bridges, $7,100,000 for Buildings, And $500,000 for Airport.

Pittsburgh and Allegheny County will co-operate with the President's national building program next year, with projects totaling $49,625,000, according to advices sent Gov. John S. Fisher by Mayor Charles H. Kline and the board of county commissioners.

The county expects to spend $33,600,000 and the city $16,025,000 according to tentative schedules of improvements.

The figures were compiled in answer to telegrams from Gov. Fisher requesting the data so that he could comply with President Hoover's request for expenditures for public improvements contemplated during the next 12 months.

$12,000,000 FOR ROADS

The county's estimate includes: $12,000,000 for roads, $14,000,000 for bridges, $7,100,000 for buildings and $500,000 for the airport.

Director of Public Works Edward G. Lang pointed out that the city has $6,000,000 available in a bond fund authorized by the people 10 years ago for a street car subway in the First and Second Wards and an unexpended balance in other bond issues of $3,425,000.

RIVER-RAIL PLAN

The Department of Public Works, according to Lang, plans to spend $250,000 for the first unit of a river and rail terminal and an additional $6,350,000 for various projects that are in contemplation for which funds would be furnished from tax revenue or bond issues.

Major items enumerated by Lang were: Extension of West Carson street to Smithfield street; completion of Mt. Washington road from Liberty Tunnels to Tenth street; completion of the program for raising North Side streets above flood level; extension of Forward avenue.

Three passengers were taken to a hospital apparently suffering severe injuries.

Young Ingomar Scientist On Carnegie Safe

Herbert Graham, young scientist attached to Carnegie Museum, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Graham, of Ingomar, started on his first big ocean expedition in September.

It was the non-magnetic yacht Carnegie which, according to reports from Samoa, was burned to the water line Friday.

Herbert Graham

Graham is one of the group reported well and uninjured.

Fresh from college, Pitt having awarded him a bachelor of science degree last June, Graham worked in the botany department of Carnegie Museum under Dr. O. E. Jennings. While attending school he was associated in biology research at the museum, having been a member of a scientific expedition to Minnesota more than a year ago, and spent part of 1928 in Arizona on biological field work with his brother, Edward Graham, and Kenneth Dowd, also of the museum.

LOSES PAROLE, SENT TO PRISON

Frank M. Soper, 31, a former resident of Glenwood, was sentenced Saturday by Federal Judge F. P. Schoonmaker to serve one year in the Atlanta penitentiary, after the court had vacated a two-year parole granted in November, 1928, when Soper pleaded guilty to transporting a stolen automobile in interstate commerce.

The provisions of the parole were that he contribute to the support of his two children, who were being cared for by their grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Minkster, 34 Cleveland street, Youngstown. According to the testimony yesterday, Soper had agreed to do so, but soon disappeared.

An investigation by Federal Prohibition Officer George O'Brien located Soper in Los Angeles, where he was arrested October 17. He arrived in Pittsburgh yesterday in custody of Deputy Marshal M. J. Flynn. He was taken into court.

CARNEGIE YACHT DESTROYED BY BLAST; 1 KILLED

Institute's Scientific Craft Burns at Samoa; Five Crew Members Injured

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30.—(INS.)—The non-magnetic yacht Carnegie, of the Carnegie Institute, was a total loss as the result of a gasoline explosion in Apia Harbor, Samoa, yesterday at 1:40 p. m., which caused the death of Capt. J. P. Ault and the injury of five members of the crew, according to a message received by the institute today. A cabin boy is missing.

The message, which came from W. C. Parkinson, senior scientific officer, said that two of the injured were the mechanic and the engineer.

The sailing master, Otto Ericksson, whose wife lives in New York, was slightly injured.

PARKINSON MESSAGE

Parkinson's message said:

"Deeply regret to report destruction of vessel, due to gasoline explosion. Capt. Ault succumbed to injuries. Four of the crew in hospital, cabin boy missing. All others safe."

There were 25 officers and crew on board.

A second dispatch amplified the first and said the explosion occurred at 1:40 p. m. yesterday, the fire spreading so rapidly that there was no possible chance to salvage any of the equipment. The naval tug at Samoa was expected to arrive this morning to give whatever aid possible.

THREE-YEAR CRUISE

The Carnegie was on a three-year cruise which started from Washington last spring. The ship was brigantine rigged, but also carried an auxiliary engine developing 150-horsepower.

Capt. Gatewood S. Lincoln, naval governor of Samoa, confirmed reports of the vessel's destruction in a message to the Navy Department. He said the yacht was a "total loss and is still burning."

Lincoln verified the death of Capt. Ault and declared the cabin boy who has not been accounted for is Tony S. Olar. Eric Stevenstrom suffered severe burns. The governor listed the following among the injured: Carr A. Sturk, Otto Erickson, John Lindstrom and Harry Olsen.

G.O.P. Leaders Abandoning Fight to Put Vare in Senate

son contest, the "boss" of Philadelphia will be permitted to speak in his own behalf on the Senate floor. Vare has accepted this opportunity and will arrive in Washington tomorrow.

Vare suffered a stroke of paralysis more than a year ago and his case was postponed earlier in the special session when Senator Reed, of Pennsylvania, declared that Vare was physically unable to defend himself.

It was learned by Universal Service today that Senator Norris, who will cross-examine Vare has armed himself with much material which never got into the record of the committee, headed by former Senator James A. Reed, of Missouri, which investigated the $3,000,000 primary in Pennsylvania in 1926.

Among the things which Norris will charge is that Vare spent upward of $900,000, instead of $800,000 in his primary campaign. Also that the source of many contributions was carefully covered by Vare.

$20,000 Questioned

No account of a $20,000 campaign contribution by Ralph Beaver Strassburger, wealthy Norristown publisher and Pennsylvania politician, was made in any of the Senate testimony accounts filed with the state. Vare or his henchmen. Strassburger was selected by Vare for national delegate to the Republican convention in 1924 in the place of Gov. Pinchot.

In the sworn expense accounts filed with the Senate committee, E. M. Kenna, Pittsburgh "strip" boss, credited former Representative John M. Morin, of Pittsburgh and now chairman of the Employees' Compensation Commission, with contributions totaling $22,000. Morin in his sworn testimony declared that he had not contributed a dollar to Vare's campaign. This discrepancy has not been explained.

In the sworn statement filed in Harrisburg, Watson accounts for a contribution received from "Gen. Whitie." This is the underworld nickname of "Germantown Whitie," a notorious Philadelphia character with a long police record who is credited with having contributed $250 to the Vare campaign. In the record filed with the Senate committee this entry is changed to "G. M. Whitie."

These are a few of the things which Norris, a master of irony, will ask Vare to explain to the Senate.

Drive Against Residential Smoke Opens Monday

HOUSEHOLDERS TO BE TOLD HOW TO CHECK EVIL

Boy Scouts to Aid Campaign Aimed at Putting Stop To Chimney Air-Pollution.

A campaign to lessen the smoke nuisance in the residential districts will be launched Monday.

Boy Scouts, co-operating with the city, the Mellon Institute of Industrial Research, the Chamber of Commerce, the Civic Club and other organizations, will undertake to show householders how to avoid polluting the atmosphere.

This is the first definite move to prevent the emission of dense smoke from the chimneys of dwelling houses, which, although not amenable to the anti-smoke ordinance, are said to be worse offenders in some sections than industrial establishments.

SURVEY TO BE MADE

Plans for the campaign were announced by Dr. E. R. Weidlein, director of the Mellon Institute and chairman of the smoke abatement committee of the Chamber of Commerce. He said that first a special air pollution survey would be made in the Oakland district by Troop No. 11 of the Boy Scouts, which has headquarters in the First Baptist Church.

The survey will continue two weeks, under the supervision of H. B. Meller, chief of the Bureau of Smoke Investigation and senior fellow of Mellon Institute. If it produces beneficial results, similar surveys will be made in other districts.

Scouts will patrol Oakland every day before and after school. When a chimney is observed to be emitting dense smoke, a Scout will call at the house, politely inform the owner or tenant of the fact, and present a card indicating how the nuisance can be prevented.

Scout Troop No. 11 is in charge of I. DeWitt Johns, scoutmaster, and Henry Venable, assistant scoutmaster. John A. Clinton, of the Bureau of Smoke Regulation, is giving the Scouts instruction as to how to carry out the survey. Each Scout is to keep a record of his observations, which will be carefully inspected.

Mellon Institute will give presents to all scouts engaged in the study, and will award prizes to those doing the best work.

The directions to be presented at houses from which dense smoke is coming are on a card titled: "Instructions on Firing the House Heating Boiler or Furnace," and read as follows:

DIRECTIONS FOR HEATER

"In the morning, shake out the ashes, open the smoke pipe damper (if there is one), close the check draft door and open the ashpit draft door.

"After the fire is burning freely:

"(a) If using coal, push the live coals to the rear part of the firebox, leaving a thin layer of ash covering the front portion of the grates to prevent loss from fine coal sifting through into the ashpit. Place fresh coal just inside the door, but do not cover the live coals in the rear of the firebox.

"(b) If using coke, distribute it over the firebox on top of the bed of burning coke.

ADJUSTING DAMPERS

"When the volatile matter is burned off (which, in the case of coal, may take 15 minutes), the dampers may be adjusted according to requirements, the smoke pipe damper partly closed, the check draft door partly opened, and the ashpit door partly closed. The slide in the firedoor should be left open as much as necessary to prevent smoke. Sometimes, just after firing bituminous coal, it is necessary to open slightly the firedoor itself for a short time, if the slide will not admit enough air to prevent smoke.

"(Note: If the dampers are controlled by thermostat, better have your heating engineer see if they are adjusted properly, then let the control operate.)

"For regular firing during the day, repeat the above operations, first shaking the grates gently until the ashpit shows bright.

"To bank the fire for the night, fire as in regular firing, but pile the fresh coal or coke high; check the draft by partly closing the stack damper, opening check draft door and closing ashpit draft door."

MRS. ELIZABETH GRAHAM PREPARING DINNER

MOTHER WAITS RETURN OF BOY FOR CHRISTMAS

Hope Still Burns for Mellon Bank Messenger Missing Mysteriously 10 Months.

BOLIVAR, Pa., Nov. 30.—A mother, disappointed on Thanksgiving by the unexplained absence of her youngest son, Harold Graham, 19-year-old Mellon bank messenger, after 10 months of anxious waiting, is hoping today—hoping that Christmas will bring her "baby" back to her.

"It was a sad Thanksgiving," Mrs. Elizabeth Graham, the sorrowing, gray-haired mother confided, "even though our other four children were with us.

"It was his first Thanksgiving away from home and—under the circumstances, it is hard.

GONE NEARLY YEAR

"Harold—our boy—was always one for his home, especially on the holidays," she continued, brushing away a tear which trickled down the ageing motherly face.

"He has been gone now since last January and I feel sure that he is alive, though some folks try to make me believe otherwise. If he only knew how broken-hearted his father and I are, I know he wouldn't stay away."

The boy was reported missing in Pittsburgh on his nineteenth birthday, last January 18. The motive for his mysterious disappearance has never been established.

LEFT FAREWELL NOTE

He is reported to have disembarked from a taxicab on the Sharpsburg Bridge over the Allegheny River in Pittsburgh, leaving a note which read:

"Peggy—I love you. Goodby. Harold."

"Peggy," it is believed, was Miss Peggy Sill, a student at Carnegie Tech, of 5862 Burchfield street, with whom he was keeping company at the time. He had spent the evening in the company of another young woman, Miss Eleanor Schneider, and had left in the best of spirits, according to Mrs. Graham, who talked with the young woman later.

The note supposedly left by the youth was never turned over to Pittsburgh police, Mrs. Graham says, but was telephoned to Miss Louise Brown, of 1419 Euclid avenue, at whose home Graham roomed. A man who said he was the taxicab driver, according to Miss Brown, delivered the message, but never turned over the note, either to her or police.

The grieving mother says she cannot understand her son's continued absence. She has been reassured both by Miss Brown, who is employed at the Mellon bank, and by bank officials that the youth's employment record is clear of a blemish of any kind.

Pittsburgh Pays Tribute To Soldiers Who Fell For 'Old Glory' in Russia

THE bodies of 68 American veterans of the memorable winter campaign in Archangel, Russia, during 1918 and 1919 passed through Pittsburgh Saturday night on the final lap of a journey to their resting place in Michigan.

The veterans came in flag-draped coffins to the Pennsylvania Station on a special train, where 12 bodies were transferred to trains for points in Ohio and Indiana.

'With All Honors'

THE 56 others continued to Detroit, where they will be reinterred in the cemetery of the Polar Division of the United States Army, with all honors the Federal government, the state of Michigan and the Veterans of Foreign Wars can give.

Arriving here at 10:15 o'clock, the train, with the locomotive draped in black bands of mourning and carrying prominent officials of the Veterans of Foreign Wars and representatives of the governors of Pennsylvania and Michigan, a 40-minute stop was made.

Pittsburgh in Tribute

DELEGATIONS of Veterans of Foreign Wars of Pittsburgh paid the funeral train homage at the station, when P. D. Seybold, commander of the county council pasts, laid a funeral wreath on the caskets, and a firing squad fired three volleys as three buglers sounded taps.

Nature, as if sensing the appropriateness of the occasion, provided a fitting setting for the last of the long journey from frigid north Russia to the United States.

North Wind's Farewell

ICE hung over the coaches and baggage cars in which the steel flag-covered coffins were carried. The observation and Pullman coaches of the train were steamed from the chill wind when the train pulled slowly into the train shed.

A detachment of nearly 100 Veterans of Foreign Wars, their ears and faces red from the biting cold, stood at attention while the coffins were removed from the ice-bound cars. A firing squad fired a salute over the train.

Some of them wore parts of the same equipment used in the Russian campaign—goloshes and rubber boots and heavy woolen uniforms.

Taps for the Dead

COLONELS and privates alike stood at attention as taps were blown in the train shed. Station patrons, police and railroad officials stood in meditation as the final notes of the muted bugles sounded through the station portals.

Before arriving here the train had stopped at Johnstown, where a single coffin was removed for interment there. Prior to that stops had been made at Philadelphia and Lancaster.

At Lancaster a touch of pathos entered into the situation where the body of Private Herbert Kistler was removed. Kistler's father, a helpless invalid, was not informed of the event because of his condition. Several brothers went to the station.

Official Cortege

ACCOMPANYING the train were Col. John S. Bersey, adjutant general of Michigan, representing Gov. Green, of that state; Col. William Fish, Twenty-eighth division, acting as personal representative of Gov. John S. Fisher, of Pennsylvania; Col. H. K. Duff, national commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars; Capt. O. A. Ojdard, commander of the Polar Bears; Walter Dundon, of the same association; Edward S. Bettelheim, national legislative chairman, of the Veterans of Foreign Wars; Theodore W. Kolbe, representing the Department of Michigan, American Legion, and Mrs. Bessie Hankin, of Boston, Mass., national commander, Women's Auxiliary, Veterans of Foreign Foreign Wars, and a number of others.

Dundon and Bettelheim went to Russia at the instigation of the Veterans of Foreign Wars and arranged with the Soviet govern- Wars, and a number of others.

19 Still Missing

A SPECIAL commission, appointed by the government, through the intervention of the Veterans' Association, co-operating with the Graves' Registration Service, helped return the bodies to the United States.

The bodies are the first removed from Russian soil since 1919.

Of the total returned to the states 24 are unidentified. Nineteen of 226 who lost their lives cannot be found. They still rest under the Russian steppes.

Burial services will be immediate.

A towering memorial shaft will be dedicated to the memory of the dead heroes next Memorial Day when the Polar Bear Association meets in Detroit at its annual convention.

The soldiers were sent to Russia to protect Allied property after the nation fell into the hands of Bolsheviki, and to assist the unsuccessful Kerensky attempt to overthrow the revolution.

KIN PROTEST PARKER WILL

The will of William A. Parker, purchasing agent of the Bessemer and Lake Erie Railroad Company, who died August 6, 1928, disposing of an estate worth $100,000, was attacked in Orphans Court during a hearing before Judge E. C. Chalfant, which was concluded Saturday.

The will admitted to probate was written and signed with lead pencil and unattested, and was dated February 17, 1928, at Hesston, Huntingdon County, the summer home of Parker. By this will he left his entire estate to his widow, Martha E. Parker. Under a will dated September 21, 1927, he gave his widow a life estate, to revert to his brothers upon her death. The brothers asked that the later will be set aside and asked for a jury trial.

Handwriting experts for both sides admitted the signature of Parker on the later will and admitted that it showed erasures and alterations. Proponents contended Parker made the alterations. Judge Chalfant reserved a decision.

Trudel, of West drive, Sewickley, filed suit Saturday in Common Pleas Court, asking a divorce from Alfred C. Trudel, of 440 Centennial avenue, Sewickley. They were married March 6, 1928, and the alleged desertion occurred May 22, 1928.

May Be Skating In City's Parks Today—Maybe

ICE SKATING may make its debut Sunday in one of Pittsburgh's city parks and perhaps more, James N. Moore, superintendent of city parks, said Saturday night.

"While we've only had one day of freezing, there's a possibility that West Park may be ready. Schenley and Highland parks are not likely to have the necessary four inches of ice," he said.

"It all depends on the weather. But if the ice is not safe, there'll be no skating anywhere."

JUDGE STUDIES RAID METHODS

The legality of government prohibition agents in "adopting" a case from state and county officers by following the latter into a private residence and assuming charge of some wine found in the house, without the authority of a Federal search warrant, was questioned by Federal Judge F. P. Schoonmaker on Saturday.

It was during a hearing on a petition of Fortunato Facciani, Croyle Township, Cambria county, for suppression of the wine as evidence against him in Federal court. Although Judge Schoonmaker said the government agents were undoubtedly without authority to make the seizure he continued the hearing one week to hear testimony from a constable who was said to have had a search warrant, so the government could complete its record of the case.

SOCKS BUYER HOLDS UP SHOP

A holdup man, seeking the choice in socks, emptied the cash register in the Thom McAn shoe store, 816 Liberty avenue, about 7 o'clock Saturday night, obtaining $150, according to Deward McKenzie, the manager.

"I'd like to see something in socks," McKenzie told police the bandit, a rather dapper little fellow, requested.

"Certainly, sir—something in a light or heavy socks?" inquired the manager.

The prospective customer took his time selecting two pairs, finally deciding on gray mauve stripes. As McKenzie started to wrap the socks, the man laid down a dollar bill and then:

"Step back to the rear," he commanded McKenzie and his assistant. "I only want what's in here," he remarked.

He turned to the cash drawer, scooping up the money and then as he backed to the door, he spoke again.

"Now, the socks please."

McKenzie tossed the package and with a smiling "thank you," the bandit disappeared into the street.

Two Pittsburghers Caught in Rum Net

CLEVELAND, O., Nov. 30.—(AP.)—Larry Davidson, 33, reputed to have made $2,000,000 as "king of Lake Erie rum runners," since he resigned from the Prohibition Department at Washington a few years ago, pleaded not guilty before United States commissioners here today on a charge of conspiracy to violate prohibition laws. He was released on $7,500 bond.

Davidson, known as "handsome Larry," was arrested with James Courtney and D. F. Coughlin, both of Pittsburgh, at a downtown hotel here last night.

Andrew Aul's Widow To Be Buried Monday

Mrs. Sarah Aul, 88, widow of Andrew Aul, will be buried Monday from the home of her granddaughter, Mrs. W. L. Stone, 1425 Davis avenue. She was born in Butler County in 1841 and had resided almost all her life on the North Side. She was a member of the Fifth United Presbyterian Church and had served for many years on the board of managers of the United Presbyterian Orphanage. She leaves two daughters, Mrs. David Linn, of the North Side, and Mrs. George T. McDonald, of Bellevue, six grandchildren and 11 great-grandchildren. Mrs. Aul died Friday.

Chain Store's Girl Manager Held Up

Miss Peggy Strong, manager, was arranging the stock in the P. H. Butler chain store, 701 N. Euclid avenue, Saturday night when four youths, three of them armed, walked in and demanded that she hand over the day's receipts. They rifled the cash register of $75 and fled.

Police Use Armored Auto Against Holiday Bandits

City detectives in an armored motor car equipped with two machine guns will cruise city streets during the pre-holiday season, as one of the precautions to prevent hold-ups and robberies.

The cruise will start Monday night, Inspector Frank Boyd announced. A training service has been started, he said, by which 22 every detective on the force will know how to handle the Thompson guns, an innovation in the department.

In addition, Boyd announces his pre-season "don'ts" for holiday shoppers. While in past years he has urged the women to use the "ladies' First National," this year he discourages its use, saying "the hours are too short and the hosiery too sheer." His don'ts follow:

"Don't carry large sums of money when shopping.

"Use hand purses when possible.

"Don't let pocketbooks dangle open on your arm.

"Don't lay your pocketbook on the counter while inspecting merchandise.

"Don't neglect to lock up the house before you leave.

"Don't leave auto doors unlocked.

"Avoid crowds in street cars by shopping early. Pickpockets work best in crowds."

Beginning next week, special squads of detectives will be on duty in department stores, railroad stations and important street car stops.

CONTROLLER'S OFFICE UNDER POLICE GUARDS

City Property Superintendent Has Officers Oust Resigned Director of Department

Watchmen [illegible] controller's [illegible] ejection by [illegible] troller Hoffman [illegible] der of Evans [illegible] intendent [illegible] terday.

As a result [illegible] nation, effective [illegible] employes [illegible] payless payday [illegible] by employes of [illegible] department.

New locks [illegible] the offices and [illegible] holding the keys [illegible] Stewart [illegible] guard.

In the meantime [illegible] Controller-elect Thomas [illegible] can—or will—assume the office is in doubt.

OFFICE TO KEEP OPEN

The office will be [illegible] business Monday, Townsend announced.

Townsend demanded Evans [illegible] and ordered him from the [illegible] Saturday morning. The [illegible] was unexpected and the ex-controller relinquished the writing machine key under protest.

Following Evans' departure Townsend ordered former Deputy Controller John Schilpp, Jr., discharged by the controller Friday to pack his personal belongings. Schilpp did and left the office.

TEACHERS' PAY TIED UP

Payments of debts owed by the city to merchants and contractors will be delayed probably a month along with the salaries of city employes and the Board of Education staff, including the teachers.

Explaining his actions, Evans said:

"I explained to Townsend that the machine had a plate bearing my name and that of the Mayor. That to open the machine we had to use the key I had and the one in the Mayor's possession. He called Frank Swaney, secretary of the Mayor, who appeared with the other key. After opening the machine, we found it was impossible to remove the plate. A machinist was necessary.

"I noticed Townsend picked up my key and I told him I wanted it. He refused. I made a grab for it. At that time, an officer was brought in. He escorted me to the Traffic Information Bureau next door. The officer threatened to call the wagon.

Townsend declared the action was taken on his own initiative. He denied orders were received from either Mayor Charles H. Kline or Director Edward G. Lang.

FIGHT IN COUNCIL

Evans' resignation was accepted by Council Friday after a spirited discussion. The acceptance was by a vote of 5 to 4. The resignation had been submitted Wednesday.

In favor of accepting the resignation were President Malone, Alderdice, Anderson, Garland and McArdle. Opposing the action were English, Herron, Little and Winters.

City Solicitor Charles H. Waldschmidt declared a ruling in a Cambria County court in a similar case would prevent Winters from assuming office at this time.

It had been proposed that Winters resign from Council and take up the controllership immediately. Citing the ruling, the solicitor said it was ruled that candidates elected in odd numbered years could not assume office until the first Monday in the following January.

He suggested Winters might resign and be appointed controller by Council.

RUM SEIZURE GETS APPROVAL

Federal Judge F. P. Schoonmaker ruled Saturday that prohibition agents had "probable cause" for the seizure of nine five-gallon cans of moonshine whisky by prohibition agents in the automobile of Harry Rosen, Avondale street, and refused the petition of the latter to have the liquor suppressed as evidence against him. The seizure was made September 17, when the machine was stopped at the red light signal at Baum boulevard and Morewood avenue.

Rosen, through counsel, contended the seizure was made without a warrant and without probable cause. The decision against him was made after prohibition agents said they had recognized the machine as one that had delivered a mash pump and corn sugar at a house in Squirrel Hill and they had "been suspicious when they examined and found the moonshine whisky at the red light signal.

MONGOLS MOBILIZED

SHANGHAI, Nov. 30. (AP)—A dispatch from Nanking tonight to the Nationalist government's Kuomin News Agency stated that Mongolian tribal chiefs had agreed to send 30,000 Mongolian troops northwest to the Manchurian frontier to assist Chinese defenders against the Soviet forces.

Meanwhile, despite denials from Nanking that conversations between Moscow and Mukden for settlement of the Chinese Eastern Railway controversy are proceeding independently, both Nanking and Mukden unofficial sources today strongly affirmed that such negotiations were proceeding.

Notwithstanding Moscow reports that the Mukden authorities have accepted the Soviet demands in their entirety, these sources declared that Mukden had declined to accept the conditions as outlined, refusing one of the three specifications.

Kansan Bought Ohio Farm Before Slaying

ST. CLAIRSVILLE, O., Nov. 30.—(AP.)—James C. Charlesworth, wealthy Wellington (Kan.) farmer, deposited $1,000 in a Barnesville bank before leaving here for his home in Kansas after purchasing a farm, W. O. Chappell, Barnesville attorney and administrator of the estate, said today.

Chappell said he had been advised by George Harbaugh, of Wellington, administrator of the estate in Kansas, that Charlesworth had been found dead apparently murdered, and had been requested to investigate the case in Ohio.

No Search Warrant, Rum Evidence Out

Because no search warrant was used by government prohibition agents on September 28, 1927, in a raid at the home of Robert Zaffey, Penn Township, two stills, 100 barrels of moonshine whisky and other contraband seized, was ordered suppressed as evidence against Zaffey on Saturday in Federal Court. Assistant United States Attorney W. J. Aiken consented to the suppression.

In addition to the two stills and moonshine liquor, the raiders seized "500 gallons of mash in the stills," 13 52-gallon barrels of mash, 50 pounds of yeast, 10 gallons of gasoline, a whisky gauge and other alleged contraband.

BYRD RETURNS SAFELY TO BASE IN SOUTHLAND

Photographic and Geologic Data Obtained in Trip To Pole Hailed Priceless.

By DAVID P. SENTNER.
International News Service.

NEW YORK, Nov. 30.—To the glory of his country and the world of science, Commander Richard E. Byrd tonight rested at his ice-jacketed base in the Antarctica after planting the American flag at the South Pole even as he had done at the North Pole.

The safe return of the famous aerial explorer following a 1,600-mile flight to the South Pole and back was announced by the New York Times, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch and newspapers affiliated with them.

The commander was accompanied in his historic air trail by Pilot Bernt Balchen, Aerial Surveyor Capt. Ashley C. McKinley and Harold June, Navy radio expert. The round trip was accomplished in 18 hours and 59 minutes. The Byrd flight over the North Pole took 15 hours and 30 minutes.

GATHER VALUABLE DATA

In the Byrd flying Saga over the heel of the world, land never before seen by man was surveyed from the air. Scientists predicted that the photographic and geologic data gathered would contribute important facts to the knowledge of humankind.

In addition, the measurement of the South Polar winds and temperatures by the Byrd expedition, may add vital statistics to the science of meteorology and the every-day science of the man in the street—the weather.

WINCHESTER, Va., Nov. 30 (AP.)—Pride and love made happy a mother's heart here today over the world-acclaimed achievement of a distinguished son.

Mrs. Richard Evelyn Byrd, Sr., mother of Commander Richard Evelyn Byrd went about her home duties as is her wont, but her heart beat with gladness over the news that her son in adding another brilliant feat to his record was safe and sound at the bottom of the world.

WIFE GETS NEWS

BOSTON, Nov. 30.—(INS.)—Mrs. Richard E. Byrd, in seclusion with her four children at the Back Bay home of her mother, today had learned of the great accomplishment of her husband, Commander Richard E. Byrd, in flying over the South Pole. It was said that she heard the news by radio before retiring last night.

She had not heard directly from her intrepid explorer-husband, it was learned at the Brimmer street home of Mrs. Joseph H. Ames, mother of Mrs. Byrd.

2 Held as Robbery Suspects Released

Ralph Bateman, 30, of 2318 Sidney street, and John Murphy, 24, of 2220 Sarah street, arrested Wednesday as they were fleeing from under the Pennsylvania Railroad trestle at Twenty-second and Mary streets, where Kazimeras Zupka, 39, of 1824 Fox street, was found unconscious, were released at a hearing Saturday before Magistrate John J. Sweeney in South Side Police Court, when no evidence of robbery was presented.

British Steamer Wrecked in Pacific

HONOLULU, T. H., Nov. 30.—(INS.)—The British steamer City of Norwich, which grounded on Gardiner Island in the Phoenix group of the South Pacific early today, is a total loss, a message from the British naval station at Apia, Samoa, to her local agents announced. All members of her crew are safe, the message added.

The City of Norwich, with a long list of ill luck on her log, was en route here from Australia for a cargo of pines.

GOOD'S FINAL ANNUAL REPORT MADE PUBLIC

Late Secretary of War's Message Tells of Many Civil Activities of Army

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30 (INS.)—The annual report of the late Secretary of War James W. Good, the final touches of which worried him on his death bed, was made public today. It was the final chapter in a long and notable public career.

The report discussed the Secretary of War has many functions of a non-military nature than military. Good reviewed the flood control activities, inland waterways and river and harbor projects, and discussed insular possessions and canal projects. About one-third of the report dealt with army activities.

Good declared there has been created for the first time in the nation's history an efficiency military establishment, spread widely over the country yet finely coordinated and capable of swift and united action."

ARMY ACTIVITIES

He cited regular army activities, development of the national guard, organized reserves and training camp activities as contributing to this development. He said the War Department has a reserve supply sufficient to equip two field armies, approximately 1,000,000 men. The department had sought equipment for 1,500,000 men, but Congress reduced this figure.

Concerning the civilian activities of the War Department, Good declared:

"There can be no reasonable doubt that the Inland Waterways Corporation has been of incalculable benefit to the people at large, that it is continually increasing its effectiveness and that it will eventually demonstrate that the development of our interior waterways and the proper utilization of such developed navigable streams will offer through coordination with railways and highways, a system of transportation furnishing cheaper freight rates to all people who have been taxed to create them; that each participating carrier by joint routes will receive a reasonable return upon the money invested, and that before long the government can pass over the corporation's facilities to private capital for operation, with the assurance that they are so safeguarded by laws, precedents and decisions that their profitable operation will indicate to private enterprise the desirability of their continued operation."

RELIEF WORK

Good also called attention to the relief work done by the Army during the past fiscal year, citing the Porto Rico hurricane of September 13, 1928, which three days later swept across Florida, inflicting great damage between Fort Lauderdale and West Palm Beach.

The Army afforded relief amounting to $953,766.35 in supplies, the report said. The Army also afforded relief in Cumana, Venezuela, when it was razed by an earthquake in January, and the next month in Duncan, Miss., when that town was struck by a tornado. During last March, when rivers overflowed in Florida and Alabama, the Army again went into action for civilian relief.

In April tents, blankets and cots had to be sent into Georgia when a tornado struck there. The Army also did yeoman service when the Cleveland Clinic was wrecked by fire May 15. The department also assisted in flood and storm relief work in Illinois, Indiana, Arkansas and Mississippi.

Detective Chief, Woman, Gas Victims

WORCESTER, Mass., Nov. 30 (INS.)—Superintendent of Detectives James J. Casey and Mrs. Vera Bingham, found dead in Casey's Lakeside cottage in the North Brookfield woods were accidental victims of carbon monoxide from a heater and not of murderer's poison.

This was the determination of the jury of a week's inquest today following a conference of medical experts. Both bodies were found on the floor of the bedroom. They had apparently succumbed with a window and Mrs. Bingham had struggled toward the doorway, it was believed.

Heart Attack Kills Ohio Mayor's Wife

CONGRESS AID FOR BUSINESS ROOM FORECAST

Snell Predicts Speedy Tax Action. No Disturbing Investigations Expected.

By WILLIAM S. NEAL
International News Service.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30.—The House will consider measures of vital import to the business world in the new session beginning Monday but will not rock the business boat by spectacular investigations or halt the Hoover prosperity drive by radical legislation, Representative Bertrand H. Snell (Rep.) of New York, chairman of the rules committee, which frames the House program, predicted today.

Instead, he declared, the House will act promptly on the administration tax reduction plan and other legislation designed to speed the wheels of industry.

STOCK QUIZ UNLIKELY

Although demands for congressional investigation follow the recent New York Stock exchange slump, there appears little likelihood of the House instituting an inquiry by a special committee. Any congressional investigation, it is expected, will be conducted by the Senate.

"Up to the present time no one has presented to me any good reason to believe that any good could be accomplished over the country by a mere investigation of the recent happenings on the stock exchange," said Representative Snell.

"It never has been the policy of the Rules Committee to approve investigations unless someone presents very definite evidence why they should be made, and is able to show that the country as a whole may be benefited.

"At the present time it seems if any legislation is needed as a result of recent happenings, it ought to be handled by the committees that have jurisdiction in a normal, logical way.

"There are some proposals for investigations, however, which will receive very careful consideration."

HOUSE PROGRAM

The House program, particularly as it relates to business, was forecast by Chairman Snell as follows:

Tax reduction, to have precedence. May pass next Friday.

Branch banking legislation. Likely to be considered by House Banking Committee on recommendations of comptroller general and Treasury.

Regulation of inter-state motor buses, already considered for three years by the House Interstate Commerce Committee. Snell declined to predict the outcome of efforts along this line.

Railroad consolidation, to be considered by Interstate Commerce Committee. Doubtful whether bill will reach House floor.

Disposition of Muscle Shoals, to be taken up by Military Affairs Committee.

Measures for further development of inland waterways program.

Appropriation of upwards of $4,000,000,000 to meet federal government's expenditures for one year.

BRANCH BANKING

"I expect more or less activity regarding branch banking, a subject which has been before the House for some time, but it is uncertain what the outcome will be," said Representative Snell.

"Enactment of a bus regulation bill seems necessary. We now have lines from coast to coast, and it is very important to the industry as well as to the public that we legislate along this line.

"I am hopeful the House will dispose of Muscle Shoals. I personally feel Congress has been negligent in not making some definite disposition of that property a long time ago. I consider it a wonderful water power and a great national asset. We have invested $160,000,000 of the people's money in it and the people should get some return."

Although he is ready to introduce a bill to provide for the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway, Chairman Snell said congressional action must await an agreement between the United States and Canada.

Knights Templar Dance Thursday

The entertainment committee of Duquesne Commandery No. 72, Knights Templar, will entertain the members of their commandery and Masonic friends Thursday evening at a dance and card party at the Hotel Schenley, Fifth avenue.

The music for the evening will be furnished by the Vogue Lad Orchestra. Dancing will take place from 8:30 until 1, cards will be played from 9 to 1. George O. Adams is chairman of the committee.

Semi-Annual Interest, City, School and County Taxes Unpaid, Trustee Charges

The appointment [illegible] for the General Hotel Company, operator of the Roosevelt Hotel, [illegible] avenue, was asked in a [illegible] suit filed Saturday in Federal Court by M. Ehrich Gimbel, Jr., of Gimbel Brothers, trustee under an indenture of mortgage and received from the hotel company July 1, 1926.

A rule was granted by Judge F. P. Schoonmaker on the Colonial Trust Company and Gimbel Brothers, Inc., named defendants in the suit as trustees of certain indentures of mortgages, and the General Hotel Company to appear in court December 3 and show cause why a receiver should not be appointed.

Fred Klaus, president of the company, and a stockholder, had no comment to make on the filing of the suit.

REST HELD UNPAID

In asking for the appointment of a receiver, Greenbaum asks that all earnings, income, rent and other profits from the [illegible] premises be sequestered for the benefit of the trustee and the holders of the bonds and interest coupons, issued under the secured by the Greenebaum mortgage, except for such expenses and other uses as may legally be incurred in the operation and preservation of the mortgaged premises.

The bill of complaint alleges that the hotel company defaulted in failing to pay the semi-annual interest of $115,830, due July 1, 1929, upon outstanding bonds aggregating $3,564,000. The bill further avers that the hotel company has failed to pay taxes and assessments levied by the City of Pittsburgh and School district of Pittsburgh for 1927 to 1929, inclusive, amounting to $128,500.13 and county taxes for 1928 and 1929, aggregating $31,299.54.

MORTGAGEES NAMED

The Colonial Trust Company, the bill avers, is trustee under a mortgage from the hotel company, dated December 1, 1925, and Gimbel Brothers, Inc., trustee under a mortgage given by the hotel company August 31, 1927.

In addition to the hotel proper, the company has under lease a number of storerooms on the hotel premises fronting on Sixth street and Penn avenue.

The plaintiff is represented by the law firm of Reed, Smith, Shaw & McClay, of Pittsburgh, and Poppenhusen, Johnston, Thompson & Cole, of Chicago.

Last week a $5,000 bond posted for Mackreth's appearance here for trial was forfeited.

MARGARET DORING, 17

GOES TO JAIL, THEN TO ALTAR

Arm in arm, Joseph Frederick 22, of 3028 Jane street, and Margaret Doring, 17, of 2826 Mary street, strolled out of Central Police Station Saturday, matrimony-bound.

Joseph had spent the night in jail. His mother had had him arrested. He had come home to pack up his clothes and there was an argument. Joseph's brother, Steve, said Joe bit his mother's finger. Steve added that Joe was lazy and seldom worked.

Margaret listened to it all and then Magistrate A. D. Brandon asked her if she still wanted to marry Joe.

"Yes," Margaret answered, so the court discharged the prisoner.

Margaret's parents followed the couple out of the shadows of jail, adding the parental blessing.

Two Killed, 5 Hurt In Building Collapse

MARSEILLES, France, Nov. 30.—(AP.)—Two persons were killed and five seriously hurt in the sudden collapse of two adjoining three-story apartment houses here today, during which a score of women and children were imprisoned.

Most of those trapped were rescued, but two children were still caught in the debris five hours after the accident, their cries for help spurring the work of firemen and troops in an effort to reach them.

One of those killed was an aged woman whose skull was crushed while she was brushing her teeth. She still clutched the toothbrush tightly in death.

DECEPTION ISLAND, South Shetlands, Nov. 30.—Our monoplane, wrecked in landing on a pile of rocks three days ago, is once more ready to fly.

Working day and night in the cold, biting wind, and assisted by Norwegian carpenters and machinists, we have repaired the damaged tail-skid, stabilizers and fuselage.

We are still having trouble with the motor of the other machine, but now, having gone thoroughly over most everything, will soon locate and rectify the trouble. Probably by the time this dispatch is read, the plane will be ready to take off again.

The temperature rose last night and a heavy snow is falling. This will restrict the operations by which we are carrying on our scientific research.

Hoover Congress Message Will Be Shorter Than Most

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30.—(AP.)—The message to be sent to Congress Tuesday by President Hoover will be one of 12,000 words, but this is considerably under the average of all annual messages submitted since McKinley.

The longest message since McKinley's time was that submitted by President Taft in 1909, which was 34,000 words.

Figures available at the White House today placed the average of all messages since McKinley at between 15,000 and 16,000 words. One of the shortest messages recently was one sent by President Coolidge, which totaled 8,000 words, but his average was 11,000. The shortest message sent by President Roosevelt was 1,000 and his longest was 21,000.

BLAME FATHER IN SON'S DEATH

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 30.—(AP.)—Capt. Philip Sebold, chief of Newark detectives, announced today that a formal charge of murder would shortly be lodged against Dominick Tartis, 65, for the slaying of his son, John, a captain of the City Fire Department.

After looking at the body of his son in a funeral parlor today the man was taken away to the place where police say Tartis confessed he hid a .38 calibre revolver. Sebold said he told him he threw the weapon away because he "didn't want everybody to know a fire captain committed suicide."

The son was found dead in his room Wednesday, a bullet wound through his forhead and another through the elbow of his arm which police said indicated he had thrown up in a futile attempt to protect his head.

The dead man lived with his father and two sisters. Questioning of the family revealed that the elder Tartis was a heavy drinker and quarreled frequently with his son.

Detectives described a dramatic scene at the bier. The room was cleared of mourners and Tartis ushered in to look at the body. His previous calm faded, Sebold said, when he walked in.

65 PIANOS LOANED FREE

Sixty-five Pianos (Grands, Players and Uprights, both new and used instruments) will be placed in homes of Pittsburgh and vicinity and they may be used until we need them—which will be an indefinite time. We have discontinued eight of our large branch stores, and are placing these instruments in our "Frederick's Annex," located at 915 Liberty Avenue. Instead of storing and holding these pianos for the regular price, we are going to slaughter the prices and take our loss now. If you have ever thought of buying a piano, now is the time. We do not wish to place our instruments in storage and all Pianos not sold outright will be placed in the homes of families who are interested in owning a piano in the immediate future, and for the valuable advertising we will receive by having good families use them. We reserve the right to select the homes in which these pianos are to be placed.

Positively No Charge For Anything

No cartage, no rent or any expense whatever. You must call at the store to make your selection. There are no strings to this offer, which comes but once in a lifetime.

1,360 SLAYINGS DRY LAW TOLL

others. Those placed the killing toll as high as 1,000.

Dry leaders have been wont to dismiss those figures as wild exaggerations, unsupported by facts.

But even the most ardent anti-prohibitionist estimates fell short of the actual number.

The appalling figure of 1,360 deaths through official violence is a smashing indictment of the folly of attempting to enforce the dry law with the shotgun. It should awaken even the dry leaders.

Every State Included

This figure is nearly seven times the number recorded by the Federal Prohibition Bureau, the latest compilation of which was made public by Commissioner Doran last month. It is more than five times the number read into the Congressional Record last June by Representative Kahn, of California and Representative La Guardia, of New York.

Every one of the 48 states, as well as the District of Columbia, is represented in the signed reports gathered by the Washington Herald, which have come from 92 per cent of the 3,075 counties of the country.

In many instances, officials answered the questionnaires on official letter heads that carried the seals of their offices, attesting to their authenticity.

U. S. Gives Up Task

Some replied that they had to omit several fatalities because the records of dry law enforcement were not complete in their respective localities.

The Washington Herald began its canvass on June 16, four days before Attorney General Mitchell announced that the Department of Justice would make a nation-wide investigation into dry law killings. On August 10 Attorney General Mitchell announced that the department had abandoned its effort as an impossible task.

The Washington Herald, however, was convinced that its own survey to obtain the truth about dry law killings could be carried through to a reasonable degree of completeness. The results of its painstaking research are presented herewith.

The list of fatalities—1,360 of them—which begins in this issue and will be continued in later Sunday issues, speaks for itself.

What shall we have: Temperance by education, or more killings by armed dry law enforcers?

Dry Killing Records Open To Inspection

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30.

THE official reports and other records on which the Washington Herald bases the assertion that the prohibition enforcement death toll exceeds 1,300, are open to the inspection of any interested official, organization or person who may wish to verify the accuracy of any statement made in this series of articles.

Transcripts of these records will be filed with Congress and the President's law enforcement commission.

Figures by states on prohibition enforcement fatalities appear on Pages 2 and 3 of Second News Section.

FLAMES RUIN OAKLAND HOME

Four persons were forced to flee their home Saturday night when fire destroyed the interior of a three-story frame house at 3512 Frazier street, Oakland, and caused damage estimated at $3,500.

The house was the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Platt, and their son Robert, eight, and Mr. and Mrs. J. Sweeney and their two children.

Mrs. Sweeney said the first knowledge she had of the flames was when a fireman ran into her basement kitchen and told her the second floor was afire.

Firemen were handicapped by the cold, strong wind and heavy smoke. Streams of water directed at the flames froze in the street and on pavements before the fire had died down. Ice forming on light and telephone wires caused them to fall.

Best Group Writers In Essay Contest Will Be Rewarded

Writers of the three best essays in each of the various groups in the contest conducted by the Better Traffic Committee will receive certificates of merit. Walter Rosenbaum, chairman of the educational section of the committee, announced. The contest is to continue until Friday.

Selection of winners of cash prizes and the scholarships to Pitt, Tech and Duquesne, will be made by a gradual process of elimination. The teacher of each class room will select the three best essays submitted to her and the principal of each school will then select the three best essays in each division of the contest in his school. This set of finalists will be given a certificate of award or a cash prize, according to the final decision made by contest judges.

The final judges of the contests have not yet been announced. Approximately 80,000 pupils are writing essays for the contests.

DR. M'EWAN'S CONGREGATION WAITS DECISION

Veteran Pastor Expected to Announce Whether He'll Stay as Pastor Emeritus

The Rev. Dr. W. J. McEwan, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, [illegible] make known to [illegible] whether he would be [illegible] emeritus of the [illegible] has served as pastor.

The congregation [illegible] ly refused to accept Dr. McEwan's resignation [illegible] striving to [illegible] promising a co-pastor or assistant would be furnished. At [illegible] last Wednesday afternoon [illegible] the official board [illegible] the church to accept his resignation.

ASSISTANT OFFERED

According to Dr. J. M. Gaston, secretary of the Executive Board of Missions of the Presbyterian Church, who presided, the board offered to provide him an assistant or co-pastor. This would relieve him of any arduous duties and at the same time, still have him remain with the church in an advisory capacity.

While there was nothing official on this subject obtainable Saturday, it was learned that Dr. McEwan appeared to take kindly to the last named proposition. This, it was indicated, would relieve him of his duties as pastor but at the same time place him in an honored position, which the congregation earnestly desires.

Only the Pittsburgh Presbytery can dissolve the relationship between Dr. McEwan and his congregation, Dr. Gaston said today. The Presbytery will not meet until December 10 and cannot act on the matter until that time. However, it was indicated by Dr. Gaston that if Dr. McEwan accepts the proposition to call a co-pastor the congregation will call another strong man.

35 YEARS AS PASTOR

It was reliably reported that if another man is called then Dr. McEwan will be elected pastor emeritus and his salary fixed at $6,000 a year as against $12,000 he now receives. It is averred that the church board and the members of the congregation desire that he continue with the church in some capacity. Dr. McEwan has served the church continuously for 35 years, he announcing his resignation last June on the occasion of observing that anniversary.

TIME TO BE CUT ON PANHANDLE

The completion of the first stage of a rebuilding program of the old Panhandle and Vandalia railroads from St. Louis to Pittsburgh will be signalized December 15, when the running time of Pennsylvania Railroad train No. 155 is reduced 2 hours and 20 minutes. Both roads are owned by the Pennsylvania and form part of the main line to the southwest.

Originally they were not constructed for the operation of fast express trains and heavy freight equipment. Six years ago a program of modernization was started, with the installation of a double track line to Indianapolis and the building of much double track and line relocation between Indianapolis and St. Louis.

The speeding up of train 155 from Pittsburgh to St. Louis will start something new in travel to the southwest. For the first time in history it will be possible to take an overnight sleeper from New York for early morning connections in St. Louis.

This will be of great benefit to Pittsburghers, as it will permit a full business day and dinner hours to be spent in Pittsburgh and yet put the traveler in St. Louis in time for a full business day there.

Rosedale Church Seeking Charter

COUNTY PROBES FLOOD MONIES

Wilmer M. Jacoby, executive secretary of the Flood Commission of Pittsburgh, will have to appear before the County Commissioners and explain what last year's appropriation was expended for before any more money will be appropriated to the commission the County Commissioners ruled at their meeting Saturday.

The request for the annual $3,500 appropriation for the commission, which has been given it in the past, was held up. The Commissioners ordered Jacoby must appear personally and give a detailed account of the expenditures from the appropriation.

"We should find out how many jobs this man can hold and what he has done with the money," Commissioner Charles C. McGovern declared, when he moved to hold up the appropriation.

A letter from Robert G. Woodside, county controller, stated that an audit of the Flood Commission's books showed that the money was paid for the salary of the executive secretary of the commission, office and traveling expenses.

The Flood Commission's activities and administration are open to inspection by the Commissioners at any time and have merited praise from county officials in the past, Jacoby said Saturday night.

$50,000 ASKED IN AUTO WRECK

Mr. and Mrs. Jason H. Jamieson, of Jackman street, Avalon, asked $50,000 damages for personal injuries from Charles Gessner, of 118 Prospect avenue, Avalon, in a suit filed Saturday in Common Pleas Court. They were passengers in Gessner's automobile last June 29 and allege that he drove so fast along Duncan avenue that the car left the road at Babcock boulevard, jumped a ditch, ascended a hill and overturned.

Jamieson suffered an injury to his right eye which has destroyed the sight, along with an injury to his forehead, and Mrs. Jamieson also was badly hurt, the suit alleged. Mary Rohrer, of Avalon beauty shop owner, a sister of Mrs. Jamieson, had previously filed suit against Gessner, asking $25,000 damages for injuries suffered.

Nine of Every 10 Pupils Ride Auto To High School

Associated Press.

EVANSTON, Ill., Nov. 30.

IF figures don't lie, 90 per cent of Evanston's high school boys and girls drive to school in automobiles.

The word automobile is used by Jacob Stadtler, custodian of the high school, in its broadest meaning. Some of the vehicles, he admits, operate erratically, and many of them are antiques. Still, in a general way, they are automobiles.

"Five years ago," said Stadtler, "the method of transportation was bicycles. Now the young folks drive. On an average day there are 250 cars parked outside the high school."

Stadtler stated with a show of pride that several of the gasoline vehicles hit on four cylinders frequently.

SALES RECORD OF WORLD HELD BY STORES HERE

Market Guide Report Shows Pittsburgh's Per Capita Purchases Top All Others

Pittsburgh department store sales per capita are almost double those of any other city in the world, Editor and Publisher reports in its Market Guide for 1930.

In a summary of the report, made public Saturday, it is stated that Pittsburgh department store sales are greater than those of Detroit and Buffalo combined.

H. W. Correll, statistician of the Chamber of Commerce, said analysis of the report disclosed that more than 40 per cent of the business of the Fourth Federal Reserve District is done in Pittsburgh. On the basis of bank deposits to individual accounts, he said, more than 2 per cent of the nation's business is done in this city.

Income tax returns for 1926, the latest available for detailed study, show that a return was made here for every 8.8 persons of the city, and one for every 12.9 persons in Allegheny County. In the entire state a return was made for every 24.2 persons. Pittsburgh's returns were 25.4 per cent of the total for Pennsylvania.

Coming down to the present time and basing statements on reports of the Federal Reserve Bank, it is learned that notwithstanding rumors that in October general business had begun to "slip," retail business in Pittsburgh was 8.4 per cent better than in the same month of 1928. Comparing the period January to October, inclusive, retail business here was 2.9 per cent better than in the same period of the preceding year.

The Post said Sullivan would give the Governor an answer in 24 hours and added "it is likely he will be named Senator Warren's successor on Monday."

EVICTED PASTOR WINS $20,000

ROCKFORD, Ill., Nov. 30.—(AP.)—A verdict of $20,000 damages for libel was returned by a jury today in favor of John A. Logan Warren, former pastor of the Methodist Church at Durand, Ill., who was evicted from his pulpit and unfrocked by the Rock River conference on charges of improper relations with a domestic in his home.

Warren had asked $50,000 damages for slander and libel in a suit brought against seven members of his former congregation, whom he accused of trumping up the charges in order to banish him from the church.

Two of the defendants, Sylvia Sodaman and Wallace Best, were discharged early in the trial on a defense motion. The slander charge was ruled out today by the court. The five remaining defendants convicted of libel and ordered to pay $20,000 to the unfrocked minister were Edgar Best, Judd Van Sickle, George Fritz, Henry Graham and Albert E. Swinson.

Patrons Drink Own Liquor, Cafes Closed

CHICAGO, Nov. 30.—(AP.)—Drinking by patrons with the knowledge of the managements, today resulted in temporary injunctions closing three fashionable cabarets.

The injunctions were issued by Federal Judge James H. Wilkerson. The cabarets were the Club Royale, the Beaumonde Club and Kelly's Stables.

Texas Guinan, who was at the Club Royale at the time it was raided, may be called to testify before the grand jury, it was said, unofficially.

Although the cabarets are not charged with selling liquor, the district attorney said he would seek to close them for one year under permanent injunctions.

3,000 CHILDREN ENJOY CONCERT

More than 3,000 school children of the Pittsburgh district Saturday heard the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra in a free concert at Syria Mosque. Eugene Goosens, famed composer and conductor of the Rochester Symphony Orchestra, of Rochester, N. Y., was guest conductor. Sunday evening he will again appear as guest conductor at the concert in which Miss Florence Austral, soprano soloist, will sing.

Saturday's concert was received with great acclaim by the youthful audience. At the close of the concert, Mr. Goosens was beseiged by juvenile admirers.

Girl Takes Poison; Condition Serious

Peggy Murphy, a roomer in the Alpha Hotel, 322 Penn avenue, is in a serious condition at the Allegheny General Hospital. Saturday the girl told a friend, Ruth Easterling, of 400 Penn avenue, that she had taken poison. Her friend called Danny Wallace and Walter Orluske, guests of the hotel, who summoned a taxicab and rushed her to the hospital. She gave no reason for the act.

Man and Wife Found Slain in Farm Home

DENTON, Tex., Nov. 30.—(AP.)—The bodies of Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Bowman were found today in their farm home one and one-half miles south of Pilot Point in the northeastern part of this county. The man's throat had been cut and the woman apparently had been beaten to death. Blood about the house indicated a struggle.

Bowman was about 65 years old and his wife was 25 years his junior.

All Gift Hunters' Trails Lead to

Reizenstein's

A handsome decanter that plays music, a one hundred year old book that conceals cigarettes in its cedar lining, a perfume bottle, the stopper of which uses a woman's form for a model, ash trays of sparkling crystal that use only personal monograms for their decoration, a smart Fox Terrier deftly modeled in china, a Florentine photo frame that easels both ways—is just a vision to show how Reizenstein's paint the worried clouds of the gift-hunter with the sunshine of unusual gifts well selected.

MISSING GIRL SOUGHT HERE

Nellie E. Mitchell, 15, cheerleader and one of the most brilliant students in the Jefferson High School, Greene County, who laid aside her books and megaphone to taste life in a big city, is being sought in Pittsburgh by the Missing Persons Bureau.

The girl disappeared November 11 from the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Mitchell in Rogersville and was last seen in Brownsville where she boarded a traction car for Uniontown. Her family and the school authorities in Greene County started a country-wide search when on November 16 the following letter was received bearing a Pittsburgh postmark:

"Dear Mother—Everything is going fine. I got a job with a well-respected family in a private home. My love for you and papa is just the same, but I think it is time for me to make my own living. So please don't worry. I will be home for a visit some day. Love to all,

"NELL."

Footpads Attack 2, Escape With $34.75

Negro footpads attacked two men within a half hour Saturday night and escaped with $34.75 cash and a watch.

A lone robber set up C. B. Shutert, of 3455 Fifth avenue, in Tustin street, escaping with $9.75 and a gold watch valued at $25. Two holdup men attacked Abraham Caruso, of 343 S. Evaline street, 30 minutes later, obtaining $25. No gun was used in either holdup.

"Ah, but I know these photographers' minutes."

He then submitted patiently to the cameramen's further instructions.

DEBTORS FOUND BY LOCATE CLUB

At the first meeting of the Locate Club held this week the names of 140 persons who had left Pittsburgh and vicinity without notifying their creditors of a change in address were read, according to J. R. Truesdale, secretary of the Retail Credit Men's Association, affiliated with the merchant-owned Credit Bureau of Allegheny County.

Approximately 20 per cent of the number were located by those at the gathering, and steps taken to find the others. Much favorable comment was heard regarding the bureau's cartoon style of advertising in the newspapers, emphasizing the manner in which a good credit rating can be maintained.

The officers of the club are Mr. Truesdale, chairman; Col. Franklin Blackstone, first vice chairman; D. H. Goldman, second vice chairman and Miss Helen Winterhalter, secretary.

Maj. John D. Meyer, who recently resigned as United States Attorney for this district, will address the members of the credit association in the Hotel Roosevelt, Monday night, December 9.

Prosperity Up to People Themselves, Forbes Says

'PSYCHOLOGICAL PANIC' ONLY DANGER; HOOVER'S DRIVE AIDING BUSINESS

sudden collapse [illegible] create panic [illegible].

President Hoover's action is calculated to forestall—irrational action. [illegible] his efforts have gotten [illegible] ing response.

Hoover's Object

What is the broader meaning of what Herbert Hoover aspires to achieve? What are his larger objectives?

Briefly:

Engineer Hoover is seeking to engineer prosperity to plan prosperity and set in motion machinery necessary to create it and cause it to function efficiently.

Quaker Hoover is determined to attack and destroy the economic fatalism which heretofore accepted as foreordained that "cycles" of prosperity must inevitably be followed by cycles of depression, that panics are the inescapable heritage of the race and that man is utterly impotent to modify this inexorable order.

President Hoover, firm in his faith, founded on past experience in what conference and whole-hearted co-operative action can accomplish, is enthusiastically launching a grand-scale experiment to prove the philosophy that neither threatened nor actual disaster need be supinely submitted to without marshaling every available force to combat it.

Assumes Leadership

Leader Hoover readily has assumed the role of leader of the nation's entire financial, business, agricultural, labor and other economic forces gathered them together, counselled and inspired them, elicited definite promises of definite action instructed them to organize themselves under appropriate groupings, get immediately to work, and report progress to him promptly and frequently.

Ex-Secretary of Commerce Hoover's ultimate aim is to utilize the co-operative foundation now being laid as the basis for the erection of a permanent institute of industrial co-ordination.

Not less effective than President Hoover's action has been the action of the nation's main enterprises and political sub-divisions. Industrial corporation after industrial corporation, railroad after railroad, utility after utility, has pledged itself to institute capial expenditures for improvements, extensions, etc., on a greater scale than any heretofore executed.

States Co-Operate

Governors of states and mayors of cities likewise have pledged themselves to carry out public works involving record-breaking expenditures for materials and labor. The federal administration will speed up construction and other work, confident that Congress will sanction greatly enlarged appropriations therefor.

Estimated capital expenditures by industrial, utility and railroad corporations, by federal, state and city administrations, are given in [illegible]

Big Companies Aid

[illegible] Big financial strength of most corporations and the condition of the money market [illegible] and facilities generous expenditures during the coming year. Many well-financed companies look upon any of the available demand for stock during the Coolidge bull market to finance betterments abundantly for future requirements. Through the sale not of obligations bearing fixed interest rates, but of shares.

A number of far-sighted managements went [illegible] to wipe out their bond obligations by calling them in and using stock in exchange as a form of refinancing. Such [illegible] possible to conduct [illegible] advantageous alike to the corporation and to bondholders who agreed to market the received stock at the then quotation, then rather [illegible]

The drastic drop in Wall Street interest rates has had overwhelming important effects. Already [illegible] called to the withdrawal from the call money market of no less than $1,000,000,000 by corporations and other "outside" investors, while brokers' loans have been reduced $3,754,000,000, or almost 50 per cent. Much of the money naturally will have to be put to work in one direction or another in the business world.

Money Abundant

Then the superabundance of idle, low-cost funds in New York [illegible] and elsewhere will make it easier to market Federal, state and municipal bonds on moderate terms. Such corporations as may so desire will also be able to take advantage of the new period of easy money.

So long as it was possible to lend billions of surplus funds in Wall Street at fancy rates of interest, many corporations and entrepreneurs preferred to reap these fancy rates rather than launch new enterprises or build costly additions to existing plants. The Wall Street money market now having lost its lure, there will be greater incentive to employ these surpluses for productive purposes.

Happily, conditions today are the polar reverse of what they were when the 1920 collapse came. Business inflation then was fearfully rampant; inventories were excessively heavy; businesses were heavy borrowers of bank money, and when the boom burst the banks found themselves plagued by untold "frozen loans" and corporations were staggering under inventories which could not be speedily liquidated. Corporations are lenders rather than borrowers now, and inventories are light rather than heavy.

Loans Aid Exports

Another consideration: Since money rates here went [illegible] which foreign borrowing has been rigidly curtailed. It is agreed that the floating of foreign loans will shortly be resumed here in volume. A $15,000,000 City of Berlin loan has just been announced. This will tend to encourage freer purchasing of American products by foreign users, thus stimulating much export trade, a trade which will this year exceed $5,250,000,000 and show a balance of not far from a billion dollars in excess of our year's imports.

The biggest spender during 1930 will be the Bell Telephone system. President Walter S. Gifford, of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, has mapped out a program calling for the expenditure of $700,000,000, which compares with $600,000,000 this year.

Sidney Z. Mitchell's Electric Bond and Share companies have planned to spend $241,000,000, while expenditures by allied companies include $45,200,000 for the American Power and Light group, $41,900,000 for the National Power and Light group, and $38,300,000 for the Electric Power and Light companies.

Big Insull Outlay

Martin J. Insull informs me the Insull group of public utilities will spend $200,000,000, against $167,000,000 this year and $140,000,000 in 1928. Henry L. Doherty's Cities Service group has mapped out a program calling for $150,000,000, a substantial increase. Consolidated Gas of New York is down for $100,000,000 and New York Edison for $75,000,000.

The industrial list is headed by U. S. Steel with $75,000,000, followed by $65,000,000 for Bethlehem Steel, $50,000,000 for the Aluminum Company of America and $40,000,000 for Stone and Webster.

Leading railroads will spend extensively. Pennsylvania's figure is $200,000,000, New York Central's, $75,000,000, Chicago and Northwestern's, $70,000,000, Union Pacific's, $60,000,000.

Must Eliminate Fear

This vital point, however, must be emphasized:

Our corporations, large and small, could double their capital expenditures without achieving any desired result if the great mass of family and individuals were to be hypnotized by mob psychology into panicky fears, causing them to stop living normally and to spend only miserly. The American people are not exceptionally niggardly.

The likelihood, therefore, is that the Wall street flurry will quickly be forgotten by all but the relatively few who have over-speculated, and that the nation will go forward with its accustomed vigor and confidence.

Normalcy means prosperity. Let us all act normally.

RHINE JUBILANT AS LAST POILUS LEAVE COBLENZ

Bonfires, Fireworks, Church Bells Mark German Flag Replacing French Tricolor.

COBLENZ, Germany, Nov. 30.—(AP.)—The French tri-color that replaced the Stars and Stripes over the famous old fortress of Ehrenbreistein after the evacuation of the American troops from the Rhineland was hauled down for the last time today, as the French soldiers began to evacuate the second Rhineland zone.

Most of the French soldiers marched to the Roselle railway station and entrained for Metz. An automobile column of 60 cars left for Mayence.

The lowering of the tri-color and the hoisting of the German republican standard on the castle above the historic Rhine was the signal for celebrations throughout the Rhineland tonight.

BONFIRES AND FIREWORKS

The evacuation proceeded quietly, but the people later gave vent to their joy at being free from the yoke of foreign occupation that has lasted for 11 years. Only a few Germans watched the French soldiers depart. There were numerous cameramen present.

Hundreds of bonfires were lighted tonight on the Rhine and Moselle hills. Firework displays burst from the bridges over the Rhine and from Ehrenbreitstein, where the American Army hoisted the Stars and Stripes in 1918.

Church bells rang out the news of freedom at Coblenz and Aachen. (Aix La-Chapelle) prominent officials of the Reich presided over festivities to which they brought the congratulations of the government and all the rest of Germany. It was "der tag" for every Rhinelander in the evacuated zone.

At Coblenz thousands of persons gathered at the "deutches eck" at the the confluence of the Rhine and the Moselle, where there is an imposing monument to the former Kaiser.

Woman's Wager Of Half Dollar Wins Her $1,522

LONDON, Nov. 30.

COOLE, a 3,400-to-1 shot, romped home to win the 2:30 race at Haydock Park today and paid a timid little woman backer, the only person who had placed a bet on him, 351 pounds, or about $1,522 for a modest two shilling—50 cent—bet.

Coole was such a rank outsider that other bettors who swarmed to the "totalizator" betting machines in use at British race tracks, backing Coole's competitors, ran the actual odds up to 3,410 to one.

The woman bet a total of $1 on Coole, two shillings to win; two shillings to place.

INDUSTRY LINES UP FOR HOOVER

By M. L. RAMSAY.
Universal Service.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30.—Leaders in virtually every major branch of industry and trade will attend the conference here next Thursday to carry forward President Hoover's plan to stabilize and advance business, the United States Chamber of Commerce announced today.

There will be representatives of 32 manufacturing and distributing groups, described as "constituting in large degree the warp and woof of the national business fabric."

Among those who have indicated their intention of attending are Albert H. Wiggins, chairman of the Chase National Bank, New York; Gerard Swope, president of the General Electric Company; John J. Raskob, Arthur Reynolds, chairman of the Continental Illinois Bank and Trust Company, Chicago; Bernard M. Baruch, and R. H. Aishton of Association of Railway Executives.

President Hoover will open the conference. Secretary of Commerce Robert P. Lamont and Assistant Secretary Julius Klein will be among the other government officials taking part.

Pair Held, Woman's Body to Be Exhumed

DURANT, Okla., Nov. 30.—(AP.)—County officers left here today for Utica, Okla., to disinter the body of Mrs. A. J. Eastep, whose husband and Mrs. Ila Hughes are charged with murdering the latter's husband, Will Hughes. Hughes was beaten to death in a barn on his farm Tuesday night.

Mrs. Eastep died less than a month ago. Eastep had said he would poison his wife. Mrs. Hughes related in a confession yesterday which revealed she and Eastep had plotted the deaths of their mates so they might marry.

The body of Mrs. Eastep will be exhumed and examined for traces of poison.

COUNTY HEADS ASSAIL BALLOT FRAUD PROBERS

Recount Board, Registration Commissioners and Bar Committee Under Fire.

The Recount Board, the Board of Registration Commissioners and the Fraud Committee of the Allegheny County Bar Association were subjected to criticism by the County Commissioners at their meeting Saturday.

All three bodies, investigating fraud in the September primaries, were branded as "having accomplished nothing," and their chief result as having been to "provide work for lawyers that cannot make a living by practicing law."

RAPPED BY COMMISSIONERS

Commissioners E. V. Babcock and Joseph G. Armstrong questioned the usefulness of the work of the three organizations and Commissioner Charles C. McGovern declared sarcastically that "they have done a lot. They have thwarted the purpose of this board in providing them with funds to investigate fraud and instead have done the finest thing for organization politics imaginable."

Commenting on the recount board, Commissioner Armstrong said:

"This board has hired spy-glasses and found the dirty marks left by hands of mill-workers and other workingmen who are election officers. They are just lawyers who cannot make a living practicing law."

QUESTIONS PLANNED

Commissioner Babcock inquired, "What have they accomplished?" to which McGovern replied, "Nothing but spend money." They will be called before the commissioners at their next meeting to explain in detail what has been accomplished.

"The registration commissioners fared no better.

"Calling all these people in away from their work looks like a waste of time and money to me," declared Commissioner Babcock. "The only question before them is that the names on the registration books did not go through the right channels to the delinquent tax collector," said Commissioner Armstrong. "It's a shame and an outrage to bring these working people in, scaring them half out of their wits," contributed Commissioner McGovern.

Armstrong then moved to call the board and the bar association committee in for an explanation, saying, "We will find out how it comes that lawyers have to hire a lawyer." He was referring to the principal item on the bar association committee payroll—salary of attorney, $250. The committee reported that so far it has spent $1,207.60 of the $10,000 appropriated to it.

The Recent Market Crash Many Had to Borrow Money

Through more than 75 years Pittsburgh's Loan Brick now a combination of 10 local loan associations has always been relied upon for emergency money. Yes, even when all other sources of emergency money were no longer available, here, loan on security. So do we. People do not object to buying stocks, bonds, real estate, etc. UNDERPRICED BECAUSE OF EMERGENCY SITUATIONS. What about DIAMONDS? Those who know, reap the same UNDERPRICED DIAMOND advantages.

BANKS-BROKERS must sell or subject the foreclosed collateral of loans on stocks and bonds—

We Must Sell the Foreclosed Diamonds

—hence, low prices based on emergency loans not on market prices that make doubly attractive an investment now in this exceptional, unquestionably safe and convertible investment. But principally it is imperative. Last week's panic-ridden buys were stupendous successes; next week after settlements, will be a record of forfeitures in offices and stores of the Diamond Loan Association. Here values—not on paper, but in cash.

REMARKABLE IS THIS CASE WON BY NEW KONJOLA

Amazed Over What This New Medicine Did After All Else Tried Had Failed.

A medicine may well be known by the friends it makes; not by mere promises and claims. Konjola is the best known medicine in America for just one reason and that is this—Konjola Makes Good.

MR. GEORGE PFOERTNER

Yet this amazing success of Konjola is not so astonishing when one remembers that Konjola is actually 32 medicines blended into one. All these ingredients—22 of them the juices of roots and herbs—go together to the source of the ills Konjola is designed to relieve, and there give battle to the causes. All around you are men and women who are enjoying today health they never expected to have again, and they will tell you that to Konjola belongs all the credit. Get all the facts from the Konjola Man. There is one in Pittsburgh, located at the Dow Drug Store (formerly McCulloch's), Penn Avenue and Sixth Street. Call on the Konjola Man and hear of numerous actual cases wherein Konjola was the first and only medicine to bring relief as in the case of Mr. George Pfoertner, 5119 Ladora Street, Pittsburgh, who just recently made the following statement:

"I certainly owe a lot to Konjola, and I welcome this opportunity to tell what it did for me, and I hope that others, who suffer as I did, will profit by my experience. For years I had been a victim of stomach trouble, which caused me to become very weak, rundown and nervous. I had no appetite and what little I did force myself to eat did not digest as it should. After every meal came misery and pain. My bowels were sluggish, and I always had aches or pains in one part of my body or another. I became very nervous and thought I was going to be forced to give up my work. To add to my distress I began to fear that I never would find the right medicine.

"But I did find the right medicine. What a medicine this new Konjola is! Within two weeks I noticed a wonderful change in my condition. In fact, two bottles of Konjola did more for me than all the other medicines and treatments I tried put together. As I continued taking Konjola, day after day I noticed improvement and at the end of six weeks I was a well man. For the first time in several years I have a good appetite and can eat anything I like. My nerves have calmed and I sleep well at night. It is easy for me to understand why Konjola is known as the medicine with more than a million friends. If the world knew about Konjola what I do it would number its friends by the billion."

That's the kind of medicine Konjola is . . . one that keeps the faith; that brings results; that makes good.

The Konjola Man is at the Dow Drug Store, Sixth Street and Penn Avenue, Pittsburgh, where he is meeting the public daily, introducing and explaining the merits of this new and different medicine. Konjola is sold also by all Dow Stores in Pittsburgh and vicinity.

State Guards Can 'Dress Up' Now Like Army

By Associated News Service.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30. NATIONAL GUARD troops [illegible] committed to purchase [illegible] blue uniforms [illegible] other than field [illegible].

The regular army has them now and wears them usually on unofficial occasions when on furlough of an evening.

Acting Secretary of War Hurley in making the authorization said the blues could be purchased from the army quartermaster from private funds or other than federal funds when the wearing of the uniform has the approval of the state authorities.

30 Units Affiliated With G. A. R. to Join In Marking Holidays

Representatives of the 30 separate units affiliated with the Grand Army of the Republic in this country, are serving on a committee that will prepare by-laws for a proposed federation of such organizations, to direct the observance of historical dates pertaining to the days of the Civil War.

More than 100 persons representing the various organizations were present at a meeting in Memorial Hall at which time it was unanimously decided to form the federation. Those serving on the committee for by-laws include Past Department Commander C. H. William Ruhe, G. A. R.; Margaret Bennett, of the Women's Relief Corps; Margaret Frantz, Ladies of the G. A. R.; Jennie Edwards, Daughters of Union Veterans; Emma Morton, of the Auxiliaries to Sons of Union Veterans and Past Commander John E. Sautter, of the Sons of Union Veterans.

$5,000 FORNEY REWARD VOIDED

The fugitive having returned the County Commissioners Saturday canceled the $5,000 reward for the arrest and return to Allegheny County of Alfred W. Forney.

The Commissioners also distributed $3,000 of the $5,000 reward for Sam Jaworski to three Detroit women, Mary Bastuba, Claire Bastuba and Helen Kupitz. Their tip to police that Jaworski's car was in a garage near their home aided in the arrest. Jaworski, who helped his brother, the electrocuted Paul Jaworski, to escape from the county jail, is serving from eight to 25 years.

Commissioner C. C. McGovern voted no on the Jaworski awards, because, he explained, the claimants did not appear in person. They were represented by a letter from their attorney, George E. Alter.

Voting Ends Sunday For Popular Prize Painting in Exhibit

Sunday is the last day to vote on the popular prize painting for this year's International exhibition. The voting contest has been going on for two weeks and has aroused much interest among visitors.

The ballots will be counted Sunday by a committee of three, consisting of Roy Jansen, Robert Schmertz and Frederick Bigger.

All the paintings in this year's International were eligible for the popular prize. This is the sixth year that this prize, a money award of $200, has been offered.

The International will continue another week, thus enabling the people to return to see the popular prize painting. The exhibition closes on December 8 and the American paintings will be returned to their owners. The European section will go to Baltimore and to St. Louis.

ACCUSES MATE OF FIRE THREAT

Mrs. Laura Elizabeth Mutchler, 1323 James street, alleged her husband, Elmer E. Mutchler, 1003 Bluff street, threatened to burn down their house because she fled from his abuse to married friends, in a bill of particulars filed Saturday in her divorce action in Common Pleas Court. They were married January 26, 1921, at Wellsburg, W. Va., and she charged that in May, 1925, she discovered he was going with other women. When she remonstrated he deserted her, she alleged.

They were reconciled six months later and separated in May, 1929, she alleged. The bill recited numerous instances of beatings, chokings and verbal abuse. She averred he boasted that any number of women would support him.

ELECTED LUTHER LEAGUE OFFICERS

The Rev. A. A. Ahn Susan Lange Betty Miller Elva Cook

PITTSBURGH CONVENTION—Officers re-elected by the General Luther League in convention in Pittsburgh as they discussed the meeting with the Rev. Mr. Ahn, Bellevue, O. They are Miss Lange, Detroit, third vice-president; Miss Miller, Baltimore, second vice-president; and Miss Cook, Columbus, corresponding secretary.

'Taken for Ride,' Find Body in Ditch

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Nov. 30.—(INS)—The body of David Altshuler, apparently the victim of gangland bullets, was found today two miles from the city lying in a ditch. Police declared he had been "taken for a ride" by bootleggers.

LUTHER LEAGUE PICKS OFFICERS

Election of officers and a banquet featured Saturday's activities in the four-day convention of the General Luther League, closing today in St. John's Evangelical Lutheran Church, Madison and Lockhart street, North Side.

Officers re-elected were: A. S. Koenreich, Canton, O., president; Archie Fritz, Oil City, Pa., first vice president; Mrs. B. C. Miller, Baltimore, Md., second vice president; Miss Susan Lange, Detroit, Mich., third vice president; George W. Scheid, Buffalo, N. Y., treasurer, and the Rev. Arthur Kuhlman, Columbus, O., executive secretary.

Miss Elva Cook, of Columbus, O., formerly recording secretary, was elected corresponding secretary for 1930, and Florence Hankhammer, of Sandusky, O., was named in her place. Walter Schmidt, of Pittsburgh, was elected fourth vice president.

A sight-seeing tour of the city, under the auspices of the Chamber of Commerce, was a Saturday feature.

The Rev. S. C. Michelderfer was toastmaster at the Fort Pitt Hotel banquet and the Rev. A. J. Traver made the principal address.

The conclave marks the last annual session of the young peoples' organizations of the joint synods of Ohio and other states before the merger of the Ohio and Iowa synods. The merger is the culmination of efforts by the league since its first meeting of 1923 in Columbus.

The convention, which opened Thanksgiving Day, will close today with memorial services at St. John's Church.

4 FACE TRIAL IN SLAYINGS

A woman who was parted from her husband will go on trial in Criminal Court Monday on a charge of murdering the husband's housekeeper. The defendant is Mrs. Ida Mae Gilmen, of Clairton, accused of firing the shots that killed Mrs. Sarah Hornsby, 36, of Elizabeth.

Arthur Williams, Negro, of Smithdale, Elizabeth Township, also will be placed on trial for murder Monday. He is indicted for the death of Milton Barrox, Negro, 48, a coal miner of Smithdale. Barrox was shot in the chest during a fight. Assistant District Attorney Earl T. Adair will prosecute the case, and William H. Stanton will defend Williams.

Joseph Lejune, Jr., will be tried Wednesday on a charge of involuntary manslaughter for the death of George Raynovich, 40, of 5 Rock street, who died from a fractured skull August 26 after being struck by Lejune's automobile at Forbes and Lawn streets.

Joseph Yardis will be tried Thursday for involuntary manslaughter in connection with the death of Stephen McCarthy, 64, in the Pittsburgh Hospital, July 2. He was struck by the Yardis car at Hamilton avenue and Albion street.

Ohio Man Escapes From Blazing Home

DILLONVALE, O., Nov. 30.—The home of Marshall Steven Besece was destroyed by fire early today, zero weather freezing water line. Mrs. Besece and children were visiting her parents at Ramsey. Besece had to run from the house to escape the flames.

SPOUSE SLAIN, WIDOWS MEET

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 30.—(AP.)—The two widows of Gen. Moises Vidal, Mexican bigamous army officer, faced each other in court yesterday where one, Senora Maria Teresa Landa de Vidal, is being tried for his murder.

The first wife, whom Gen. Vidal never divorced, took the witness stand, and was asked to tell her feelings toward the second wife who had replaced her in her husband's affections.

"I do not hate her," she said, looking sternly at the pretty young second wife, who was Miss Mexico at the Galveston beauty contest recently.

The first wife said she had lived happily with Gen. Vidal in the state of Vera Cruz until he met the second wife about a year ago, and disappeared. She learned finally he was in Mexico City and had married again. She followed him to the capital and filed the charges of bigamy, which brought the case into the Mexico City papers.

It was upon reading an account of the filing of the bigamy charges that the young second wife took the general's own gun and killed him.

"He was the only man I ever loved," she told interviewers. "If they do not convict me I shall become a nun, for I never want to marry again."

The case probably will go to the jury soon.

Lineman Seared By Wire Contact

He was taken to the Harrisburg Hospital, where his condition was reported serious.

International News Service.

ROCKVILLE, Md., Nov. 30.—ELIJAH DUFFIN, Negro, on trial for the prosaic charge of chicken stealing, owed his liberty today to the fact that his accuser, C. E. Burriss, doesn't believe in a divinity that has the power to reward or punish after death.

Vogt stated that unless the notices are filed within the stipulated time he cannot certify the new officers elected to the state authorities.

WIFE 'CARVED' HIM, MAN SAYS

Claiming that he was the victim of frequent "tantrums" of his wife, George Wallace Boam, 28, of 411 Rochelle street, Knoxville, vice president and manager of the Trustees System Company of Pittsburgh, was granted a divorce from Catherine Wolfred Boam, 25, of Geneva Hill, Beaver County, in a decree handed down by Judge George V. Moore in Common Pleas Court.

They were married May 7, 1925 at Fort Lauderdale, Fla. Boam described abuse heaped upon him by his wife during her "tantrums" at parties in Florida and in Pittsburgh. On one occasion she cut his hand with a carving knife and on another she stabbed him with a long-pronged fork and he was the target for numerous things she threw at him, according to his testimony. They separated January 26, last.

WIDER 5TH AVE. PROJECT AIDED

Widening of Fifth avenue to an 80-foot street from Shalom street, the 2600 block, to Point Breeze, became nearer a reality Saturday when the County Commissioners authorized signing a "deed of dedication" to the city for 20 feet of the Soldiers and Sailors' Memorial Hall frontage in Oakland. A letter from Richard B. Mellon requesting the action was attached to the deed.

A similar deed was authorized for the county property in Diamond street, which will permit widening to a thoroughfare with a 34-foot roadway and sidewalks. These deeds are necessary before the city ordinances providing for the changes can be submitted to Council.

Sidewalks Along County Roads Will Be Studied

Provision for pedestrian traffic on county roads to be built in the future was ordered investigated by the County Commissioners at their meeting Saturday.

Other states are making sidewalks in the form of a narrow strip of concrete set along the roadsides. This is usually of a lighter color than the main road and the engineering department was instructed to consider this in road planning.

The matter was brought up after a petition of 200 residents of Sandy Creek requested that the commissioners put cinders on the berm of the Verona road from Sandy Creek to the borough line. The road is used by about 200 school children. The request was referred to the Department of Public Works.

71ST CONGRESS BEGINS MONDAY ON LONG GRIND

Only Tax Reduction Program Assured Speedy Passage; Vare Fight Opens Senate.

By GEORGE R. HOLMES,
International News Service.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30. — A Congress theoretically fresh, but actually pretty well battered and bruised by the rough voyage through the Hoover "honeymoon session" assembled in the capital tonight to undertake an enormous amount of legislation beginning Monday. It is the first regular session of the Seventy-first Congress.

The grist of legislation embraces everything from tax reduction to prohibition reform, from tariff revision to a fight over the world court, from the right of a senator to his seat to the appropriation of some $4,000,000,000 with which to run the vast machinery of government another year.

PRIMARIES NEAR

And there will be politics, too, for just ahead are the congressional elections of next year, when the entire house membership of 435 and one-third of the Senate face the voters again. Primaries begin early in the spring.

The one piece of legislation that seems assured of snappy action is the administration's proposal to cut $160,000,000 off the nation's tax bill, benefiting the "little fellow" and the big corporation alike with a reduction of 1 per cent.

"Tax reduction by Christmas," was the slogan of the gathering legislators today. It is an administration measure, but the Democrats willingly have gone along, the insurgents are for it, and it appeared likely tonight that the lumbering machinery of Congress actually will rush the legislation through in the next three or four weeks. Politically it isn't very healthy to oppose tax reduction, anyway.

SPEED ON TAX CUT

The tax measure will receive immediate consideration in the House. The House is well-disciplined and can act fast when the leaders give the word. The resolution will be introduced on Monday, and the leaders hope to pass it by Thursday.

The Senate starts off with a colorful battle that has alternately flared and smoldered for two years—the fight over the seating of Senator-elect William S. Vare, (Rep.), of Pennsylvania. Vare has knocked vainly on the Senate doors ever since presenting his credentials.

This time the Senate gives promise of disposing of the issue once and for all by simply not seating the Philadelphia machine leader. The Republican leadership hopes to declare his seat "vacant," which will permit the Governor of Pennsylvania to name a successor, thus shutting the door on William B. Wilson, Vare's Democratic opponent, who also has been vainly knocking at the door for admission. There will be a real fight on this, however, with a week's debate.

TARIFF FATE IN DOUBT

The fate of the battle-scarred tariff bill is in doubt, although the leaders were talking hopefully tonight of passing it, too, by the first of the year. But even if that can be accomplished it is only the beginning of another fight, for the bill must go to conference, and there is about as much similarity between the Senate and House bills as there is between a Republican from Wisconsin and one from Pennsylvania.

A good deal in the tariff situation depends upon what President Hoover has to say about it in his annual message, which probably will be delivered on Tuesday. Mr. Hoover has steadily withstood all kinds of pressure to make known his position on the rates as written by the House and rewritten by the Senate. There is a vast amount of speculation on Capitol Hill as to what he is to say on Tuesday concerning the way the Senate has man-handled the original bill.

Behind these matters looms a vast array of other legislation that will receive more or less consideration—railroad consolidation, kicking around the halls of Congress for eight years; radio regulation, a rivers and harbors bill, reforms in the Indian administration, the result of an investigation during the special session; possibly some anti-lobbying legislation as a result of the disclosures by the Caraway committee; odds and ends of farm legislation, confirmation of appointments, etc.

And interspersed between these come the great supply bills which will aggregate some $4,000,000,000.

Senate Appropriations Post Taken by Jones

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30.—(AP.)—The resignation today of Senator Jones, of Washington, as assistant Republican leader, made certain a broad reorganization of the faction-split party in the Senate for the next session.

Senator Jones resigned to become chairman of the important Appropriations Committee, a post made vacant by the death of Senator Warren, of Wyoming. It appeared tonight that Senator McNary, of Oregon, who was advanced by the "young guard" Republican regulars as their spokesman, would succeed Jones as assistant leader.

President Hoover has been in consultation with Senate leaders this week and there are indications that he has shown considerable interest in bringing about a reunion of the Republican forces. Senator Smoot, of Utah, announced after a White House call today that he had definitely decided to continue as chairman of the powerful Finance Committee.

DIVIDENDS FOR YEAR EARNED BY P. & W. VA.

October Net Profit Shows Decline Due to Lower Volume of Car Loadings

By GEORGE H. SNYDER

Pittsburgh and West Virginia Railway Company earned its dividends for a full year in the first 10 months of 1929. The high rate of industrial activity prevalent in this district most of the year resulted in the road's showing of a gain in its gross and net income.

The line reported net, after all charges, of $1,878,477 in the 10 months. This was equivalent to $6.21 a share on the 302,351 shares of stock. It compared with $1,727,699, or $5.71 a share, in the corresponding period of 1928.

"The stock is on a $6 annual dividend basis so that profits for the current year will show a fair margin over dividend requirements.

TRAFFIC DECLINES

Profit for the full year is expected to compare favorably with 1928, when $6,673,417, or $7.41 a share, was earned, but the increases shown in the early months of the year are not likely to be continued for the balance of 1929.

This is attributable to the fact that industrial operations in the Pittsburgh district have fallen to a lower level within the past month and the volume of coal traffic has not been large.

As a result of this decline in loadings October net, after all charges, was $151,387, compared with $250,089 a year ago.

CAPITAL STRUCTURE

The common stock is in an exceptionally favorable position, due to the small amount of funded debt outstanding. At present the road's fixed interest obligations total about $8,964,000. Of this $6,000,000 has been issued recently to defray the cost of the 38-mile extension to Connellsville, now under construction. There is no preferred stock.

Merger possibilities have greatly stimulated interest in the road. Due to its strategical position in the Pittsburgh district, it has been mentioned in the consolidation proposals of most of the eastern trunk lines.

The road has its own plan to create a new trunk line by consolidation with the Western Maryland and the Wheeling and Lake Erie. The Wabash would like to take over the entire Pittsburgh and West Virginia plan and incorporate it in its own scheme. The Van Sweringens have been seeking joint ownership of the Pittsburgh and West Virginia by the leading eastern systems.

PENNSY PURCHASE

A furore was caused in railroad circles recently by the report that the Pennroad Corporation, affiliated with the Pennsylvania Railroad, had purchased control of the Pittsburgh and West Virginia. The story was not denied until several weeks later when the rumor was laid to rest while officials of the road were testifying before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Such a move by one of the leading carriers would be entirely logical in the future since the Pittsburgh and West Virginia represents a stumbling block to the plans of several of the other systems.

WHEAT MAKES SHARP UPTURN NEAR CLOSING

CHICAGO, Nov. 30.—Quick right-about-face action of the wheat market in the late dealings today hoisted prices to more than 7c a bushel above quotations current Tuesday. Earlier today the wheat market tended downward as a result largely of month-end liquidating sales. During the last of the day, however, sellers of wheat became scarce, and with predictions going around that December deliveries here Monday would prove to be small, possibly not more than 500,000 bushels, the market rose rapidly.

Wheat closed strong, 2⅛@2⅞c net higher.

Corn closed ⅝@1⅛c up, oats at ⅜@½c to ⅞c advance and provisions varying from 5 cents decline to a rise of 2 cents.

Sugar Market.

NEW YORK, Nov. 30.—Raw sugar was quiet today and in absence of business prices were unchanged at 3.87 for spots duty paid.

Raw futures opened 1 to 2 points lower under liquidation and some selling by houses with European connections, which probably was promoted by the disappointing showing of the London market. The offerings were absorbed by trade and Cuban interests, and following the fall a steadier tone developed and nearly all the initial loss was recovered with the market closing net unchanged, except May which was 1 point lower. The volume of business, however, was of extremely small proportions, and there appeared to be a disposition among operators to limit fresh commitments and await developments in the spot market. Approximate sales were only 5,950 tons. December closed 1.95; January, 2.02; March, 2.06; May, 2.12; July, 2.20; September, 2.25.

Refined was quiet and unchanged at 5 cents for fine granulated.

Steel Prices.

NEW YORK, Nov. 30.—Steel unchanged.

STOCK PRICES DRIFT LOWER IN DULL WEEK

Falling Off in Freight Loadings Affects Rails; Coppers Under Pressure.

NEW YORK, Nov. 30. The New York Stock Exchange resumed full five-hour sessions in the first half of this week and closed for an extended Thanksgiving holiday in the second half. Trading turned dull and prices drifted irregularly lower. While the reaction was widely regarded in the nature of a technical correction, many observers looked upon the selling as an indication that the uneasiness created by the recent sharp break in prices had not been entirely dispelled.

While Wall Street found cause for gratification in the outcome of President Hoover's conferences to stimulate business, particularly in the announcement of an expansion and maintenance program of nearly $2,000,000,000 by the public utility companies next year, the further falling off in freight car traffic and steel demand brought forth additional notes of caution from leading commission houses. Heavy selling to establish losses for income tax purposes is expected next month, but this probably will be offset to some extent by the purchase of other securities with the proceeds of those sold.

Acute weakness cropped out in most of the copper shares this week on account of unconfirmed reports that independent producers were shading the official 18 cents a pound rate for the red metal.

Oil shares displayed a relatively firm undertone on buying, influenced by the belief that the coming meeting of the American Petroleum Institute will record further progress in the efforts now being made for a world-wide curtailment of crude production.

Rails ran into some selling as a result of the drop in car loadings and the disappointing statements of some of the October earnings reports now being published. The Pennsylvania and Seaboard Railways announced large offerings of additional common stock during the week.

Amusement shares turned weak on the announcement that anti-trust suits had been brought against two of the large motion picture companies.

A series of increased and extra dividends made their appearance during the week, one of the most important being an increase from $5 to $6 in the annual rate on New Haven common. Higher payments also were authorized on International Match and a flock of smaller companies.

Credit conditions continued relatively easy. Call and time money dropped to the lowest rates in more than two years, with call loans available early in the week in the outside market as low as 3 per cent.

Wendell Hall goes into the southland for atmosphere this Sunday. When the curtain rises on the Majestic Theater of the Air, WJAS at 9, Wendell will trot out Lee Morse, the blues [illegible] crooner belaying the Mastersingers and Miller and Lyles, the Negro entertainers.

Adventures of the Northwestern Mounted Police, made dear to most Americans through the vehicle, "Rose Marie," will be recounted in the Durant Hour, WCAE at 7 o'clock.

May Singhi Breen and Peter de Rose, who have decided that two can live cheaper than one, will be heard as "single" persons for the last time over WCAE at 7:45. They will be married this week.

"INDIAN LOVE CALL"

Major Bowes has planned a musical trip around the world. WCAE at 7:30; Earl Spicer, baritone, will give us "On the Road to Mandalay," KDKA at 9:45, and Jesse Crawford will come to the front with an organ solo of "Indian Love Call," WJAS, at 10:30.

As usual the good old folks of Jonesport, Maine, will hold their weekly "gathering" in the WEAF studios at 10:45. Few continuity writers can equal the sagacity of Phillips H. Lord in putting across stories with a moral. When Seth Parker asks "Ma" to sound the note on the old-fashioned melodeon, Pittsburgh followers of this unique "Church of the Air" will be tuned to WCAE.

Sky Battle Next In Mystery House

A battle in the clouds between two aeroplanes is portrayed in the episode of the radio serial story entitled Mystery House, to be heard over WCAE Friday night at 10:30 o'clock. This is said to be the first time such a scene has been pictured over the air.

Freese and Stewart Next From "7-11"

Ralph Freese, tenor soloist and announcer of many NBC programs, and Kathleen Stewart, staff pianist, will present the program entitled Personalities at 7-11 to be broadcast over KDKA Friday evening at 8:30 o'clock. Edwin McArthur will accompany Freese.

Lyrics Draw From Musical Comedy

Musical shows of recent years contribute the ballads to be heard when Bernice Taylor, soprano; Fred Waldner, tenor, and Josef Koestner's orchestra broadcast the Launderland Lyrics program over WCAE Saturday night at 8:30 o'clock.

Mandolin Quartet In "Idora" Waltz

"Idora," a waltz selection played by a mandolin quartet, and Italian folk melodies will be heard in the Neapolitan Nights program to be broadcast over KDKA Wednesday evening at 10 o'clock.

Banjo Team in First Concert Thursday Night

Talent sometimes perches in radio studios without being noticed. It was so in the case of Jack and Andy, banjo team, who visited downtown studios on several occasions to watch artists but never thought of offering their services until Jim Hughes accidentally "discovered" them in the WJAS reception room one night strumming away at instruments they had borrowed from other entertainers. The music sounded so good and the harmony was so sweet that Mr. Hughes booked the boys as "Jack and Andy, String Wizards," for their initial concert over WJAS Thursday evening at 6:30. The boys have a unique style of playing, it is said. Two numbers on their first program will be "Moonlight and Roses" and "Drifting and Dreaming."

SCOTCH DOUBLEHEADER

SIR HARRY LAUDER will play a doubleheader for the radio audience tonight. He will go "Roamin' in the Gloamin'" for Enna Jettick Melodies, KDKA at 8, and will tell the world "I Love a Lassie," KDKA at 8:15.

20 Hollywood Stars Out For First Radio Premiere

Sounds of Crowds Outside Chinese Theater, Announcements By M. C., Greetings From Ronald Colman, Others Come to Pittsburgh Through WJAS.

Twenty of Hollywood's most famous film stars will be heard in a program originating in Hollywood, California, to be broadcast over WABC and a network hook-up of the Columbia Broadcasting System beginning at 11:30 o'clock, Eastern standard time. First day night. The event will be the first national broadcast of a Hollywood premiere. WJAS will be the Pittsburgh station.

Ronald Colman, Vilma Banky, Dolores Del Rio, Corinne Griffith, Ann Harding, Lupe Velez, Fannie Brice, Rod La Rocque, Harry Richman, Louis Wolheim and many other stars will be heard speaking at that time from the Chinese Theater in Hollywood where Ronald Colman's "Condemned" will be having its first night.

It is expected that an additional list of famous names will be announced this week. The program will bring not only the voices of the stars, but all the ceremonies of a Hollywood opening to America and Canada as well. Arrangements for it were concluded in New York between William S. Paley, President of Columbia, and Samuel Goldwyn, film producers. Stars of all film companies will participate.

Sounds of the crowds outside the theater, announcements by the master of ceremonies, greetings from the stars and other interesting incidents of a Hollywood opening will be put on the air by placement of microphones outside and inside the theater. Hitherto openings of pictures in Hollywood have been broadcast through a limited group of Pacific Coast stations. "Condemned" is the first picture to have its premiere broadcast internationally, or even nationally.

Radio listeners in countless foreign lands will be enabled to tune in on the gala event through the facilities of W2XE, the short wave rebroadcasting station of the Columbia System, which is regularly heard in all parts of the world.

Rieck Offers New Program

With the strains of "Kiss Me With Your Eyes," the Rieck Revellers will usher in a series of radio programs to be broadcast to the public as a token of good will from the Rieck-McJunkin Dairy Company, the pioneer dairy organization of the Pittsburgh district.

The Rieck Revellers will make their radio appearance at KDKA Tuesday evening at 7:15 o'clock.

It is the desire of the Revellers and the sponsor to construct the radio presentation in a fashion that will give the listeners a variety of instrumental and vocal selections, including the old-time favorites.

Firestone On Air One Year

The Voice of Firestone will celebrate its first year of broadcasting Monday night, and the program will be made up of the songs which have been requested the most in that time.

The greatest number of requests came for music of love, romance and the home. "Valencia," "Serenade," "Canadian Capers," "Painting the Clouds with Sunshine," "Song of Songs," "Tin Pan Parade," "Dance of the Buffoon," "Sweet Mystery of Life" and "Comin' Home" are listed, with the theme song, of course, "Memory Lane."

Vaughn De Leath, contralto, and Franklyn Baur, tenor, are the headliners on the program.

The Firestone program will be broadcast over 50 stations, including WCAE in Pittsburgh.

HOLLYWOOD "FIRST NIGHT" ON AIR

VILMA BANKY, one of fildom's brightest stars, will take part in the broadcast of Ronald Colman's new picture, "Condemned" at the Chinese Theater in Hollywood Thursday evening at 11:30.

WJAS will relay the voices of Ronald Colman, Fannie Brice, Dolores Del Rio, Ann Harding and a dozen other screen personages in the Hollywood "first night" broadcast over Columbia network.

Chief Escapes In Armored Car

The "Chief" escapes from a sunken armored car in the episode of the Johnson and Johnson musical melodrama which will be heard over KDKA Tuesday evening at 9 o'clock. His dash for liberty began when Jimmy Otis and Rowley Rawson, of the Clarion, surprised him while he was directing the robbery of an armored express truck carrying a shipment of currency. The "Chief," in his attempt to make a getaway from a squad of detectives and police, drives off in the armored car, crashes through the side rail of a bridge and falls into the river. How he escapes from the enclosed vehicle provides the police with a new mystery.

Forester Quartet In Old Harmonies

The old harmonies, "Carry Me Back to Old Virginny" and "Sylvia's Hair Is Like the Night," will be sung by a male quartet during the broadcast by the Sylvania Foresters over KDKA Wednesday evening, at 8:30 o'clock.

"Recital Revue" By Sister Team

Behind the Brown Bilt Footlites, when that program is broadcast over station WJAS at 8 o'clock Friday evening, will be found what has been aptly described as the European Intimate Revue, worked out in terms of two people. As a matter of fact, the "Recital Revue" presented by Gene and Kathleen Lockhart cannot be classified with any style of entertainment yet seen in America.

GRACE M'BRIDE, a Pittsburgh girl, will present selections from the quaint but prominent Vienna, musical center of the Old World, when she appears as violin soloist over KDKA Wednesday night at 6:15.

75 Per Cent of Listeners Rely On Newspapers

THE importance of the radio sections of newspapers as potential circulation builders is indicated in the results of a radio listener survey completed by WENR, the 50,000-watt Chicago station.

The survey was conducted in this way: Several announcements were broadcast requesting listeners to indicate whether they select programs by referring to the newspapers or whether they merely "dial around" until they find something of interest. Answers were received from 31 states—a total of more than 1,000 replies. Compilation of the replies resulted in the following statistics: 75 per cent of the listening audience refer to programs printed in newspapers; 20 per cent use lists made up by themselves or from sources other than newspapers; 4 per cent merely "turn the dials;" 1 per cent listen regularly each week to programs or stations that are their favorites and do not attempt to find either new stations or new programs.

Revives Selection From "Prince Igor"

Eugene Ormandy revives the "Polovetsian Dance" from "Prince Igor" for the Jack Frost Melody Moments to be heard over WCAE Thursday night at 9:30 o'clock.

The royalty note is also sounded in the same program with Adam's overture to "If I Were King." Haydn's "Gypsy Rondo" is to be played as a xylophone solo by Dave Grupp. Oliver Smith, tenor, will sing two solo numbers.

Trumpet Soloist Guest of Minstrels

Joe Alessi, trumpet soloist, will play "Inflammatus" when the Dutch Masters Minstrels broadcast over KDKA Tuesday evening at 9:30 o'clock.

The Cotton Pickers' quartet: Carson Robison, novelty vocalist; Paul Dumont and Al Bernard, end men; Harold Branch, tenor, and Darl Bethmann, baritone, present the regular program.

Virginian Program By Negro Contralto

Marian Anderson, a young colored contralto who won the 1925 Lewisohn Stadium Contest in New York City from a field of three hundred contestants, will sing Negro spirituals, plantation songs and melodies reminiscent of the old South when the Around the World with Libby concert ensemble presents a Virginian program over KDKA, Tuesday evening, at 8:30 o'clock.

Rubinstein and Kreisler Numbers

The compositions of Kreisler, the violinist, and Rubinstein, the pianist, divide honors in Erno Rapee's Mobiloil Concert in which Lois Bennett, soprano, and Fredric Fradkin, violinist, will be heard over WCAE Wednesday night at 8 o'clock.

Symphony Touch To Popular Ballad

A violin solo by Sacha Fidelman and a symphonic arrangement of "I've Got a Feelin' I'm Fallin'" are featured in the Cities Service concert to be heard over WCAE Friday night at 8 o'clock.

Frederic Baer In Title Role

"The Secret of Suzanne," Wolf-Ferrari's opera, written in one act with only two characters, will be presented over WCAE by the National Grand Opera Company under the direction of Cesare Sodero Thursday night at 11 o'clock. The scene of the story is a drawing room in Piedmont in 1840. Countess Suzanne (Rosalie Wolfe, soprano), smokes a cigaret. The object is refinements in piano making. Photographs are used to study the relations of the rigidity of the frame and the pull of the wires.

BOYS WHO MADE GOOD

TWO small town boys who made good in the city—Rudy Vallee, whose radio crooning brings him $15,000 per week, and Graham McNamee, whose income no one knows. Suffice it to say that McNamee's Christmas gifts one year were valued at $25,000.

Radio Leaders Back Hoover Business Plan

Meet This Week to Discuss Problems of Industry—Sales on Increase

NEW YORK, Nov. 30.—Radio sales now are increasing after a temporary recession, it is stated by President H. B. Richmond of the Radio Manufacturers' Association, in announcing a call for a meeting of the association's board of directors December 6 and 7 at Briarcliff Lodge, New York. The directors' meeting is incident to the industrial conference initiated by President Hoover to stabilize and stimulate business conditions. The radio industry leaders will consider measures to cooperate in the industrial program of the President and will be represented at a meeting called by the U. S. Chamber of Commerce at Washington, just prior to the meeting of the association's board of directors.

Merchandizing problems will be foremost on the docket of the radio manufacturers' board meeting at Briarcliff. Reports will be submitted on many recent surveys of the radio market.

"These indicate," said President Richmond, of the Radio Manufacturers' Association, "that radio sales fell off somewhat during the last fortnight in October, coincident with the stock market slump, but now are on the upgrade in the normal busy sales this year."

At the Briarcliff meeting of the manufacturers' board of directors broadcasting and legislative problems, including the measures pending in Congress to continue the life of the Federal Radio Commission, also will be considered.

Rudy Vallee Rises at 9, Sings Until 3 Next A. M.

NEW YORK, Nov. 30.—(AP.)—Rudy Vallee is a hard working man. Furthermore, he is not the idol of the flapper.

These statements are backed up by almost conclusive evidence, part of it documentary.

Anyone attempting to dog the footsteps of the crooning orchestra leader, popularized by radio, soon finds out what it means to be in the public eye.

Rudy gets up between 8 and 9, devotes the morning to business at hand, such as making records, holding rehearsals and sitting for his picture.

Between 12 and 1 he goes to the theater where his orchestra plays at from four to five shows daily.

At 11 p. m. the day is still young. Three hours more of music at his restaurant brings the clock near 3 a. m. That puts him to bed around 4.

Fame, due entirely to his manner of broadcasting orchestra music and singing "the slow tempo," would seem to be no snap.

Last summer Rudy took time off to make a talking movie. Now he can be heard in five places almost at once: radio, theater, night club and on records, while his movie makes the fifth.

In denying he is the flappers' idol, Rudy offers evidence brought by the mail man. Of the thousands of letters he gets from women, two-thirds or more are from wives and mothers. Flappers represent the one-third minority.

Men write Rudy too. They produce a fourth of his correspondence, with the majority of the letters of a favorable tone.

As long as his strenuous days and nights permit him to carry many melodies, Rudy intends to play on the radio. He is appearing twice a week now on NBC: Thursday nights on a coast to coast chain and late Saturday nights in a broadcast from his cafe on WEAF only.

Of radio, Rudy says:

"I hope that the day will never come when I am not a source of pleasure and interest on the air. I know that I always will want to broadcast, as I am never so happy as when before the microphone.

"I realize that ours is a radio band. We owe our success to the radio fans."

Rudy has brought his parents Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Vallee, from Connecticut to a New York apartment.

RADIO ECHOES

THE are practiced by the radio fan with the soldering iron complex is far from beconing lost.

Each year seems to produce a new crop of those inclined to tinker or build their own despite the fact that more factory made receivers than ever are coming to light.

WHILE without question there has been a big decrease in the home assemblers over the earlier years of broadcasting, enough of the "old timers" still stick to their screwdrivers and pliers to give incentive to parts and kits manufacturers.

In addition hundreds each year take the place of those who get tired of satisfying their experimental bent. These newcomers largely are made up of the youth of the nation who have that American desire of making something with their own hands.

MANY instances are still being sighted of the deep seated interest in radio building. There is the New York banker who sets aside several hundred dollars a year to "play around" in his basement laboratory with his pet hobby, radio.

In another section of life, an engineer, who certainly should have enough of things mechanical and electrical in his daily tasks, is seldom satisfied unless he is trying to iron out the kinks in a set he has put together.

Radio Brings School Home

"The biggest kick I get out of radio isn't from the business end of it at all. It is from the human little sidelights that I run into every day, and in particular those having to do with youngsters. I think there's more real liberal education in a night of well-selected radio programs than in a six-hour school day—but don't quote that too literally."

Capt. William Sparks, president of the Sparton radio organization and one of the picturesque characters of the radio industry, expressed this view before a recent meeting of Sparton dealers, and cited interesting examples in support of his statement.

"A couple of months ago on a train from Los Angeles to San Francisco I met a little shaver about seven years old, and after making him talkative with a couple of sticks of chewing gum he solemnly told me why he didn't care so much for Stokowski and Damrosch, but did like Amos and Andy. He pronounced the big names right, too.

"When the Graf Zeppelin was making her round-the-world trip I spent a couple of nights at the home of one of our distributors. He has a 12-year-old son. I'll bet that kid learned more about geography by following the progress of the Zep on a map as it was broadcast each night than he did all year in school.

"One of our officials back at Jackson has a 6-year-old. Usually the family is at dinner when the news bulletins are being broadcast. He gets more enjoyment out of her 'Daddy! What does that mean?' than he does out of his meal.

"I don't believe the parents and educators have yet realized what a force is at work in homes supplementing the work of schools. I don't believe they ever will fully realize it, for its influence is so gradual and there will be no means of comparing the present school generation with the last. But I do believe this: If parents stopped to think about the outside things brought into the home by radio, and if they stopped to analyze their probable influence, not a home in the country would be without a radio of some kind. They would be a whole lot more careful about the programs they select for reception also."

Damrosch Weaves Symphonic Pattern

Walter Damrosch weaves selections from five great composers into a striking symphonic pattern when he conducts the orchestra in the General Electric Hour to be broadcast over WCAE, Saturday night, at 9 o'clock.

Scottish Ballads Wednesday Night

From the braes and lochs of bonnie Scotland come a group of traditional airs which the Black and Gold Room Orchestra will play during the broadcast over WCAE Wednesday evening, at 6:00 o'clock. This program is dedicated to the memory of Thomas Carlyle, British author who was born in Scotland December 4, 1795.

You're on the Air

Fred G. Rodgers

Frederick G. Rodgers, general program director of Westinghouse radio stations, with the duty of general supervision of radio programs on Station KDKA, WBZ and WBZA.

Mr. Rodgers is a pioneer in the radio field. As soloist and announcer, he began his long and successful career with Station KDKA in December, 1920.

In addition to his radio activities he has taken an active part in church and concert work.

Mr. Rodgers attended Durham University, England, and studied voice with Edwin Kellett, senior tenor lay clerk at Durham Cathedral. He has also had considerable stage experience both abroad and in Pittsburgh.

"Fred" is a real scout, most friendly, full of humor—keeps those around him in good spirits. He is an exceptionally well educated man and a valuable executive who does things.

Floyd Donbar

It has often been proposed that Floyd Donbar, engineer at KQV conduct a radio lovelorn column for his admirers. Floyd has lots of girl friends and we understand he gets more mail than Ted Kay.

But to talk to this 24-year-old youth one would think his love centered in radio, music and football, for in these three fields he has accomplished an enviable success.

Floyd tinkers much with his short wave receiving set and through his efforts KQV has rebroadcast recently the programs of G5SW from London, PHI at Huizien and CJRX at Winnipeg. We know Huizien must be spelled right for Floyd is Dutch.

Folks in Bellevue know him as a quiet sort of fellow possessing a baritone voice with excellent range.

He's energetic, ambitious and camera-shy—that is, ever since he started raising a mustache.

'Jim' Hughes

The new program director at WJAS is an affable radio chap. When "Jim" Hughes walked into the old WJAS studios on Penn avenue less than a year ago he convulsed Sam Pickering, H. J. Brennan and the staff with offhand impersonations of artists before the microphone that night. Before the evening had ended he was "on the air" and a day later he was signed up.

"Jim" is a most likeable fellow — comic, cheerful, full of wit and never out of sorts, it seems.

He was on the stage many years with Eddie Leonard's Minstrels. Besides blackface dialect, Jim is very good at Dutch impersonations. He's versatile—sings, dances, plays the harmonica, does most everything theatrical.

Wagner's "Flying Dutchman" Friday

Selections from Wagner's "The Flying Dutchman" introduce the Black and Gold Room Orchestra broadcast over WCAE Friday evening at 6:00 o'clock.

Hand Tuning Best Method

"After many refinements it seems that at least one of the fundamental operations of the radio receiver—that is tuning—has reached the greatest possible degree of simplicity and efficiency," says Ray H. Manson, Chief Engineer of the Stromberg-Carlson Telegraph Manufacturing Company.

"In early models there were often as many as three or four tuning controls, and sometimes, in addition, there were vernier controls for finer tuning. Of course, from the viewpoint of commercial development this situation was impossible and the simplification of tuning was one of the first major problems attacked by all set manufacturers.

"The whole problem in making a single tuning control receiver was the difficulty of achieving perfect synchronism of the radio frequency and detector circuits. Inasmuch as each is tuned by a variable condenser, the gang arrangement which affects single control tuning must be accurately made so that the capacities of each tuned circuit will be in synchronism. The coils must have exactly the same inductance if precise alignment of condensers over the entire wave band is to be achieved.

"Although practically every receiver now uses gang-tuned condensers there are still diverse methods of actuating the condenser gang. A few sets employ automatic control. From the standpoint of simplicity and reliability, the single hand-controlled rotary tuning dial will probably remain the favorite method of station selection."

MUST LEARN HOW TO CARE FOR SELF

Valuable Knowledge Came After Much Suffering By Husky Worker.

"There is a heap of difference in the way we live up here and the way I used to live in Georgia, and it keeps me guessing—or used to—to keep well and fit in the North," said Frank G. Dickson, a big, muscular freight handler of New Castle, Pa., in talking with a World's Tonic man. "This climate is different and we from the South have to learn how to take care of ourselves. It was a long time before I learned that lesson, and I almost died before I got it. Here the food and climate are so different! I'd have given my shirt more than once for a real old mess of turnip greens and corn bread and molasses, if my stomach would have digested them same as it formerly did.

"Of course, I caught cold up here. Down South I would just have sweated it out. Here it kept getting worse, and I snuffled and coughed all the time. Before I had been up here long that old stomach of mine acted scandalously. It got so it would not digest the food I could get, and before long it even refused to try. Then I was in a fix. I lived on milk—yes, sir, just plain milk—for nearly three months. I did not have any more strength than a rabbit, and I got so thin I felt lonesome by myself. My blood and skin got ashy and my eyes turned yellow. I wanted to go home, but I did not have the price. I lost all my vim and courage, and did not want to see anybody. My legs ached at night from rheumatism and my back ached in the daytime. I was in plumb bad shape when a friend told me to take World's Tonic. Say, man, that medicine sure fixed me up! I had taken almost a bottle before my stomach got right, and the rest of my troubles dropped off one by one. Inside of a month I was eating three squares a day, my bowels got regular, and I was gaining weight and working every day.

"But that was not all. That good medicine put real vim and courage into my old body, and today I can hold my own with any of the young fellows. Now, instead of being lonesome, I dearly love to get out with real folks, and I am happier than I ever was in Georgia. World's Tonic is certainly the peppiest medicine I ever had, and it has made me ten years younger. I'm for it all the time!" This good medicine can be obtained of Dow's (formerly McCulloch's), also May's, Mayflower, or of any other first class drug store. (B-33)

Yale's Home Games Yield Million for Athletics

ELIS DIVIDE WITH MAJORITY OF GRID FOES

Revenue Received for Parking Cars Also Adds Fortune to Gate Receipts

Debt Incurred in Building Spacious Athletic Plant Soon to Be Wiped Out.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 30.—(INS.)—"Like getting a quart of milk into a pint bottle" is the way Harold H. Woodcock, general manager of the Yale University Athletic Association describes his task of doling out 45,000 tickets of admission to football games in Yale Bowl to many times that number of persons who in some way or other seem entitled to the tickets.

And distributing tickets is only one portion of Mr. Woodcock's job in the football season. His task became a bit more complicated this fall when the decision was reached to charge $2 for every auto parked on the Yale property surrounding the bowl. There was a protest. But there was no appreciable lessening of motor cars. For the Dartmouth game 9,000 cars were parked on Yale property.

SPLIT WITH OPPONENTS

Receipts from games in the bowl which now run upward of $1,000,000, are split with Yale's football opponents. The bowl seats 76,786 persons. For the Princeton game this year those seats yielded approximately $383,930. Princeton received approximately $191,965. Army drew a gate as big and Army received about $127,000. Vermont was given a flat $3,000 and Maryland $5,000. Dartmouth, with a gate of about $350,000, received about $117,000 as her share. Brown gets one-third the receipts for her game. In all the six games played in the bowl this year resulted in Yale's opponents receiving about $450,000.

When Yale went down to Georgia in early October to dedicate the new Sanford Stadium, Yale would accept from her host only the sum that Yale was in the habit of paying Georgia on her visit to the north in other years. That sum is $7,500.

Yale uses her receipts from athletics to pay the expenses of all student athletics, including the cost of providing land on which the games may be played. For one thing, there are the class football games. "Students and players are more interested in these games than most of us realize," says Mr. Woodcock. And "more and more there is a demand for undergraduate athletic activity."

BORROWED MONEY

To provide facilities the athletic association at Yale has borrowed money. The sum of about $500,000 is still owing and the receipts from the bowl are being applied to meet this debt steadily and regularly.

It is now expected that this debt will be cleared away in three years. After that—well, it is fairly conceivable that more space will be needed, and so there will still be a demand for funds.

But all that has no bearing on the question of how to get tickets of the quality that graduates believe their right and due. That situation is likely to exist for some time. Yale is turning out more graduates each year and taking in more students each year. It is still a puzzling performance, and as General Manager Woodcock puts it:

"It is like getting a quart of milk into a pint bottle."

HOPE-HARVEY AND WEST VIEW BATTLE SUNDAY

Old Rivals Renew Independent Gridiron Feud in Their Second Meeting of Season.

Champions Eager to Turn Tables on Rivals for Defeat Suffered Last Week.

By TOM BIRKS

WITH the season among the independent gridders on the wane, fans in the district will not have much of a selection of games Sunday for their afternoon's sport, but the Hope-Harvey Majestics scheduled to meet West View for the second time and eager to wipe out that defeat of last Sunday, it is quite possible that this game will be a repetition of the first meeting.

The abrupt ending of last Sunday's game warranted another meeting of the club. While Hope Harvey outplayed the 1928 champions the blocking of Levy's punt was a masterpiece on the part of the West View line.

The game itself was nothing different from the usual West View-Hope Harvey games. It was a hard battle throughout and against that powerful Majestic line the West View backfield did not go so hot.

However, Stan Berkman, Cole, Havrilla and Kenny are anxious to get another crack at that highly-touted Majestic line.

BACKFIELD STOPPED

The Majestic backfield did not look so hot against the Muzzio outfit. In the first place, Stan Berkman gave the greatest exhibition of punting ever seen around this neck of the woods. Dan Rooney at his best could not have outpunted Berkman in that battle.

Out at Frazier street grounds, the Oakland Community gridders will meet a team known as the Oakland All-Stars. It is a benefit game for various members of the Community team, and practically all of the sporting men in the Oakland district, headed by Doc Quailey, will be behind the game. In fact, the old Pitt man will be the quarterback on the All-Stars' team. The All-Stars will be selected from the following: Happy Butler, Mike Butler, Tom Coyne, Doc Qualley, Pat O'Malley, Freddie Fahey, Sharke Ridge, Jim Ryan, Cootie Dyer, Tom Quigley, Pop Riley, Sox Joyce, Bill Brown, Jack Barrett, Flash Costello and Milo Stratton.

All Oakland is pepped up over the game, and, according to Regis Leheny, who is manager of the All-Star outfit, a banner crowd is going to be on hand.

Fandom around the district hardly were enthused over the calling off of the big independent games on Turkey Day. While the weather was not the best, games have been played under worse conditions. It was cold, but football is a cold weather sport.

ENTIRE DAY SPOILED

The whole day was spoiled for quite a few members of the Burns and West View teams, who spent the bigger part of the day traveling to and from a game that was never staged.

It is quite possible that the all-star independent teams for the season will be announced one week from Sunday. This selection is going to be harder this season than ever before.

All of the leading teams in the district have quite a number of former college stars in the lineup, and these players after playing in practically all of the important games must be considered. Last season Bill Johnson, of McChesneytown, was the outstanding fullback in the district, and Goldberg was the outstanding quarterback, and it was unanimously agreed among fans and critics alike that these men earned a place on the team. But this season it is different. In all the positions there is little to choose between some of the contenders, and the selection is going to be purely and simply a matter of opinion. It is the big games that name the leading contenders on the all-star team, but the leading games in the past two weeks have been a flop.

INDIANS' MODEST STAR

AVERILL—Earl Averill was an untried rookie when he reported to the Cleveland Indians last spring. At the close of the campaign he was an accomplished star hailed as the greatest outfielder to break into the American League in years. Earl wears modesty along with his laurel wreath. His feats won him the fond regard of Cleveland fans and his modesty helps him to keep it.

EARL AVERILL IS NONCHALANT DIAMOND STAR

Indians' Sensational Rookie Helps Cleveland Fans to Forget Tris Speaker.

Tribe's Outfielder Makes Auspicious Start, Finishes With Homer Record.

IF Earl Averill, the young Washington outfielder whom Cleveland bought from San Francisco a year ago for $50,000, has a middle name, it probably is "Nonchalant." If not, it ought to be, for a more blase rookie never flashed across the major league horizon.

His teammates thought he might get a big kick out of some of the great musical productions on Broadway. He yawned his way through them and remarked they were not much better, if any, than the shows he saw in Snohomish, out in Washington, where the tall trees grow. They wanted to show him the Woolworth Building, but he said he had seen a picture of it on a postal card. They sought to take him through the Capitol at Washington, but he demurred, saying he would rather go through the botanical gardens, as flowers (he having been a florist) would interest him more than a group of senators.

OFF TO GREAT START

The average rookie in making his major league debut has buck fever and shakes like a leaf in the breeze when he first goes to bat. Not so with Earl Averill, of Snohomish, when he stepped to the plate in Cleveland on April 16 with two out and no one on, a left-hand batter to face another Earl, Earl Whitehill, the crafty Detroit southpaw. All he did was to send the ball sailing high over the right field wall for a home run. Incidentally, it was a run that saved the day for Cleveland as the score was tied in the ninth, the Indians winning in the eleventh. And to show his initial effort was no fluke, Averill, the following day, hit George Uhle for two singles and another home run.

When the season ended, the records showed that nonchalant florist had made 18 home runs, the largest number ever compiled by any Cleveland player, (for, you know it is no easy trick to make homers in the Cleveland park), collected 198 hits, including 41 doubles and 12 triples, scored 110 runs and drove in 95.

USES HEAVY BAT

Averill weighs only 160 pounds or so but nevertheless when he joined the Indians he was swinging a bat that weighed 44 ounces, or four ounces more than the one used by Babe Ruth, who carries 60 pounds more of flesh than Averill. The boy from Washington still carries the 44-ounce bat up to the plate occasionally, but more often he uses the 40-ounce bludgeon. But, although only a middleweight, according to fistic classifications, Averill has the arms and shoulders of a heavyweight.

Billy Evans, general manager of the Indians, who was forced to go to the Pacific coast to induce Averill to sign with Cleveland, was worried a trifle for fear Averill would not be able to hit left-hand pitching. He worries no longer.

"Herb Pennock does not seem to be able to get me out," says Averill in his matter-of-fact way, "while I generally have been able to break up every game that Rube Walberg has pitched against us. Rube has a home run ball he pitches me. Perhaps it's because Rube came from my part of the country. It's different when Bob Grove pitches to me. I made only two hits off him all season and one of them was a scratch. Figure it's a pretty good day for me when I get a foul off him."

CAPABLE FIELDER

It is not only at bat that Averill is making the Cleveland fans forget all about Tris Speaker, since whose departure Cleveland has tried out close to 16 center fielders. The Washington youth also has distinguished himself as a fly-grabber, thus providing Manager Roger Peckinpaugh with a most appreciated surprise.

"Baseball parks on the Coast are not as large as those in the major leagues," said Averill to Peck when he reported, "and an outfielder does not have the chance to go and get them, but if you will give me plenty of practice shagging flies in morning practice, I guess I'll learn to go back further than I did in Frisco."

New York, Philadelphia and Chicago baseball writers wrote columns about Averill's sensational catches before the season was ended, while the Cleveland enthusiasts—well, they believe Speaker's shoes have been most capably filled in every way. Averill may lack Speaker's color, but he does not lack his confidence.

CHRISTIAN U. WINS TITLE

FT. WORTH, Tex., Nov. 30.—(AP.)—Texas Christian University won its first Southwest Conference football title by fighting Southern Methodist University to a 7-to-7 tie before 25,000 fans here today.

After the Mustangs had scored first on a pass to Mason in the third period, the Frogs came back to put across the tying counter in the last quarter, and to scrap the Mustangs off their feet until the final gun. Grubbs, Frog quarterback, dived across for the tying score from the one-yard line, and Green added the extra point that gave the Christians the championship.

Only a stubborn stand by the Methodists' line deprived the Frogs of what would have been a winning touchdown late in the game. Four times the Frogs' backs plunged into the Pony forwards from the one-yard line without gaining an inch. Again a Christian pass, thrown by Grubbs in a desperate endeavor to score, was missed across the goal line.

Cy Leland, the outstanding Frog backfield star was stopped almost dead for the day, but Grubbs' great performance made up for Leland's failure to get away on his usual long gallops. The lineup:

IOWA RESTS BIG TEN CASE

IOWA CITY, Ia., Nov. 30.—(AP.)—After six months of intensive preparation, University of Iowa tonight rested its case, awaiting a verdict on its plea for reinstatement into the Western Conference. The decision, it is expected, will be given at the Western Conference meeting in Chicago next Friday night.

In a document of some 3,000 words, which is being distributed to the other Big Ten schools for consideration in advance of the meeting at Chicago, Contents of the report will not be made public.

So far as a survey of the Big Ten constitution discloses Hawkeye officials say, only a majority vote will be necessary to repeal the edict suspending athletic relations with Iowa January 1. They added that they hoped that five of the nine schools would align themselves in support of Iowa, namely, Northwestern, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Indiana and Purdue.

The report is expected to answer specifically and in detail all of the various charges preferred by the Big Ten at the time of the Iowa suspension.

Among other things, the report is expected to explain how Iowa officials have investigated the eligibility of every athlete involved in charges of recruiting or of subsidizing either through scholarships, unpaid notes for tuition or alumni "slush" funds.

Greensburg Regards Season as Closed

W. P. I. A. L. Title Claimant Does Not Favor Post-Season Game

GREENSBURG, Pa., Nov. 30.—With the Syracuse Cup Committee scheduled to meet in Pittsburgh next Tuesday to decide the claims of the football teams for the W. P. I. A. L. title, it became known here today that Greensburg High School officials do not favor the playing of a post-season game, should one be ordered.

There are three title contenders, including Rochester, Clairton and Greensburg, neither of whom was defeated during the season which closed on Thanksgiving Day.

While no official action has been taken by the local athletic board regarding a probable post-season game, the local gridders handed in their uniforms Thursday. Practice has ceased and Coach Loucks has indicated that the team is through for the season. The basketball candidates are also to report next week, which strengthens the probability of no game.

In case a post-season game is ordered, however, which would affect Greensburg, the local athletic board is expected to give an official statement. The Brown Tornado went through a card of 10 games and was neither beaten nor tied.

In the Class B circles, Hurst High, of Mt. Pleasant Township, stands as a leading contender and will be on hand with a claim at the meeting next week. Hurst played through a long grind of 12 games, losing only to Greensburg. It defeated among strong Class B teams, the Freedom eleven by a 37-0 score. Freedom, on the other hand, was beaten, 7-0, by Rochester, a Class A contender.

Villanova Tops Temple

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 30.—(AP.)—Just when it appeared that the two teams would battle to a 0-to-0 draw, the Villanova College football eleven rose in its might in the last period and smashed out a 15-0 victory over the strong Temple University team today. Twenty-five thousand persons sat through the coldest November day in Philadelphia in 49 years to see the teams battle on the frozen field.

Villanova's first touchdown followed a blocked punt, it getting the ball on the Temple 26-yard line. After short gains, Gillespie shot a pass to McGann on Temple's one-yard line, and the latter stepped across the goal for the score. Gardner made the extra point on a placement kick.

Villanova scored two points when Harkins blocked a punt and the ball bounded behind the end zone for a technical safety.

Gillespie's sprint of three yards on a lateral pass around the right end soon after Gardner had made a brilliant 24-yard run, accounted for Villanova's second touchdown. The try for goal struck a goal post. The lineup:

Pittsburgh Suburban Areas Attract Home-Builders

SUBURBS SHOW CITIES HOW TO GROW RAPIDLY

Pittsburgh No Exception in Big Building Programs In Adjacent Boroughs.

The surburban areas of many American cities are growing faster than the cities themselves, according to a report by the National Association of Real Estate Boards.

This situation holds true in Pittsburgh, where virtually all of the adjacent territory is made up of rapidly growing boroughs. Building in Mt. Lebanon Township last year amounted to nearly 50 per cent of all the home-building done in Pittsburgh. Other South Hills boroughs such as Dormont, Brentwood and Overbrook recorded large totals.

The North Boroughs as a group play a big part in building. West View has been a favorite location for building and the construction boom there has been extended into Ross Township. The boroughs east of the city have all drawn a large share of construction work although the totals last year were generally not as large as in 1928. The Chartiers Valley boroughs, including Ingram, Crafton and Carnegie, report a substantial volume of building.

SITUATION IN CHICAGO

In Chicago, the Regional Planning Association reports that while the greater increase in population is still inside the city, the suburban area is growing rapidly on a percentage basis than Chicago.

Using estimated population figures for next year, the planning association finds that in spite of the rapid growth of the central city, its percentage of increase in the years from 1920 to the present time is 23 per cent as compared with an increase of 83 per cent in the growth of the suburban areas in a 30-mile circle around Chicago. This suburban area covers 125 municipalities.

St. Louis, with a population of 772,000 in 1920, and 856,000 in 1929, has increased 11 per cent in these years, while seven important communities outside of St. Louis, and inter-dependent upon the St. Louis district, have increased at rates ranging from 95 per cent to 386 per cent in the same length of time.

The six cities of the Niagara frontier region of New York state, of which Buffalo is one, increased by percentages ranging from 1 to 12 in the years from 1920 to 1925, while the open territory surrounding these cities increased by percentages ranging from 15 to more than 70 per cent during the same length of time, according to the Niagara Frontier Planning Board.

Watching Real Estate
By M. V. BURGESS

REAL estate is passing through a buyers' market in which prices have been reduced to a point where real bargains are offered. According to experienced brokers, there has been no time in recent years when real property has been priced at more attractive levels. As in every other market, a downward trend in realty prices does not tend to stimulate business. Many will rush to buy when prices are at their peak and show no interest in a market where much more attractive offerings prevail.

SALESMANSHIP for a number of years was an unnecessary art in the real estate business. During the boom, which followed the war, buyers were plentiful, and the big difficulty was to find good properties for sale. Gradually this condition changed. The number of buyers decreased and the number of listings increased. At the present time listings in real estate offices are the largest in years. Buyers must be shown values. There is a noticeable increase in inquiries, probably influenced to some extent by the decline in the stock market.

WHILE business conferences are meeting at Washington and bringing out facts which have done much to support confidence in the prosperity of the country, it is pleasant to note that October was the greatest month in the history of Western Pennsylvania for new building contracts. The F. W. Dodge Corporation announced that work contracted during the month is valued at $42,329,300. This is an increase of 213 per cent over the preceding month and 187 per cent over the same month last year. The big gain was made possible by three large contracts, a $20,000,000 iron and steel mill, a $6,000,000 hospital and a $3,000,000 lighting system.

THE New York Real Estate Security Exchange will be officially opened December 16. The mechanical equipment of the trading floor has been completed and it is patterned after the system of the New York Stock Exchange. On either side of the trading floor are three posts for the various listed securities. A raised desk is provided for the recorder who will be connected by telephone with the price board on which sales of the realty stocks and bonds will be marked. It will be the first market of the kind for real estate securities.

USE of pictures in the sale of homes has become increasingly effective in giving the prospect a clearer idea of what the market offers. Appraisal men and engineering and title companies are also using pictures to complete their service. One office, that of John D. Strock, recently photographed more than 250 Pittsburgh homes. Prints have been sent to the owners as souvenirs and copies catalogued according to streets. The result presents a good cross section of the house market in the districts where the firm operates.

CONFIDENCE in the growth of Pittsburgh is seen in the appropriation of $7,600,000 for improvements in 1930 by the Bell Telephone Company of Pennsylvania. The new addition to the downtown building at William Penn and Strawberry ways will cost $2,000,000. This structure will add to the group of imposing buildings rising in the upper part of the triangle. The company also plans the erection of a new building at 719-35 Warrington avenue to house the Lafayette and Hemlock exchanges. Other funds will be used in the extension of underground and aerial cables.

REAL estate agents in New York who offer property for sale in advertisements under the pretext of being private owners are violating a law placed in operation September 1 in New York state. A dealer who advertises must make the fact that he is a dealer plain in the advertising. This law is aimed at that type of "blind" ad, in which a dealer represents that he owns the property and infers that a sale can be made without the payment of a commission.

OPENING of the south end of the new Sawmill Run boulevard is scheduled for December 14. The new boulevard is a broad concrete road connecting the Library road in Overbrook with West Liberty avenue near the south end of the Liberty tubes. Besides furnishing a new and better entrance to Pittsburgh from the south, the road means a big improvement in transportation for Carrick, Brentwood, Overbrook, Castle Shannon and East Brookline. The latter community will soon be linked directly with the new boulevard. The north end of the Sawmill Run project, involving heavy excavation in the West End district, will be completed later.

MODEL HOUSE IN NORTH HILLS ESTATES SOLD

Modern Home to Be Open Three More Weeks for Demonstration Purposes.

Sale of the Sun-Telegraph model home in the North Hills Estates plan along the Perry highway between West View and Perrysville has been announced by the North Hills Improvement Company. The purchaser is a resident of the North Side who will occupy the home before the first of the year.

The house will be open to the public for three more weeks of demonstration. Modern features in construction and equipment will be pointed out by the attendants in charge.

Furnishing of the home has been done by the Boggs & Buhl Company. Furniture was selected to harmonize with the atmosphere of the home. In the living room, with its beamed ceilings and stone mantel, the individual pieces are done in Old English finish.

The house is a seven-room brick residence with two-car garage attached. The walls are of skintled brick backed with cinder concrete building units to protect against changes in temperature. Junior beam and concrete construction are used to make the first floor safe, strong and fireproof.

ENGLISH COTTAGE

Variegated slate has been used to give the roof the appearance of that on the antique English cottage. All sheet metal work on the roof, including gutters, flushings and downspouts, is in aluminum. A new type of aluminum shingle has also been used in the roof of the tower above the entrance door.

Bathroom and shower room in the home are in tile, with fixtures in colors to match. All pipes in the water system are in copper, installed without use of threaded joints. A hot-water system is used to heat the home and makes use of the latest design in radiators.

The kitchen is completely equipped with built-in units. A fan expels the vapors of cooking from the room and a chimney-fed incinerator consumes all household waste. A modern electric refrigeration unit completes the equipment.

Walls in the home are done in California stucco on the first floor and on the second floor are decorated. Steel casements have been used in all windows. Radio outlets and telephone plugs have been installed at convenient points on the first and second floors. A radio aerial is concealed in the roof.

MORE BUILDING SEEN IN STATE

The trend of building activity in Pennsylvania turned upward in October, ending a decline of several months' duration, according to reports to the State Department of Labor and Industry.

Forty-one municipalities in the state issued building permits for work costing $15,283,980 last month, an increase over the reports of October, 1928, of $1,149,082, or 8.1 per cent.

October's increase cut the drop for the year thus far below the figure for the corresponding 10 months of 1928 to $17,534,472, which is measured at 9.2 per cent. For the first three quarters of 1929 the drop was $18,776,518 or more than 10 per cent.

Out of the 41 cities and boroughs making reports to the department, 21 gained in building last month. Philadelphia, which had previously suffered the greatest loss, led all others in the advance last month with the issuance of permits totaling $8,175,510, which is a gain of $2,440,055.

Others with gains of more than $100,000 were: Pittsburgh, Bethlehem, Harrisburg, Reading, Scranton and Donora.

Erie experienced the greatest decline, which was $1,071,870, or 78 per cent. Wilkes-Barre was second highest in the losing column with $407,273 and other heavy losers were: Allentown, Monessen, New Castle and York.

Design of Home Garage Important in Building

Size of and approach to the home garage are matters of import upon which there is considerable disagreement even among the so-called experts. Convenience and legal factors are involved as well as space limitations, skill as a driver and safety of car and property.

As the number of families operating two cars is growing rapidly, garages are taking more plot area, hazards are doubled and all factors become more complicated. In an effort to secure what might be called an ideal specification, an authority on the subject was approached and the substance of the following paragraphs was secured.

It is no longer considered economical, except in cases where budgets are exceedingly limited, to build a single car garage. If the extra space is not immediately required for the owner's second car, it is valuable for housing the car of a guest, particularly in bad and cold weather, during his visit, or it may be rented to a neighbor and so produce income that will defrey the cost. Sooner or later, in the majority of cases, the owner will use the space himself.

When the garage is located within the house, particular care should be given to construction, doors to house and so on, so that it may be in accordance with the local building code. Attention should also be given to the point of entry to the house and so on, so that it may be in accordance with the local building code. While it is very pleasant to have the garage in the house, unless one builds on a sloping plot architectural considerations will in most instances dictate that the garage be attached to the house or placed at the rear of the site.

It is usual to locate the detached garage on lot lines. In some localities this is not permissible, due to local code requirements. Driveways must not be obstructed by shrubbery, steps to the house, gate posts. Driveways should be 10 feet between fence posts entering the drive; if such posts are at the front of the lot adjacent to the street, a better width would be 11 or 12 feet, due to the fact that a car will have to enter the drive on a turn. Shrubbery and trees too close to the drive tend to scratch the cars when passing.

Width of actual concrete or cinder drive may be eight feet, which will accommodate all treads of cars with space left over for variations, but due to the width of bodies a 10-foot clear space is recommended between obstructions.

It is recommended that a space of at least 25 feet in front of the garage each way be provided to permit a car to be turned around. If the space is not obtainable due to location or size of the house or for other reasons, it is recommended that garage doors be nine feet, giving an opening about 19 feet wide to permit the car to start the turn while still in the garage.

CANADA HOLDS ATTRACTIONS FOR VISITORS

COLLEGE TEAMS TO DEDICATE NEW STADIUM

Prepare for Winter Sports Season. New Roads Permit Travel to Ski Camps.

Intersectional Football Game Chosen as Vehicle to Open Sports Season in Miami.

By JOHN C. MANNING.

Canada with its wealth of [illegible] its share of Americans [illegible] dentally Pittsburghers [illegible] eral of the latitudes had to be [illegible] of their automobiles to spend a month or six weeks [illegible] covered highways [illegible] the Dominion.

There are distinct charms in the Canadian winter. Bracing air, charged with ozone and oxygen, one feels exhilarated as he [illegible] in warmed indoors and [illegible] scarcely realizes how extreme cold it may be. In fact the prevailing briskness affects the spirit and one is tempted to indulge upon the least provocation of fatigue who would.

Extensive preparations have been made in Canada for the winter sports season. The Banff annual winter sports carnival will come in for its share of attention. Several of the local swimming clubs of the Dominion have already decided to enter the aquatic competition and several more are expected.

On account of the recent establishment of the Mt. Norquay ski camp there will be six weeks ends of special winter sport events in Banff. It may well to attend if you possibly can. The roads have been improved. I understand, and it is now possible to go the entire distance to the ski camp via automobile.

Ski-running is now the popular winter sport and is one in which all can indulge. Several toy courses have been built in preparation for the opening of the winter tourist season and great attention has been given to the safety of these courses. Skating ponds are in readiness for the onrush of outdoorsmen who enjoy this type of winter sport.

Several of the Canadian hotels have arranged for ski-jumping competitions to take place during the season. These competitions will be under expert supervision and instruction will be given to beginners. Snowshoe clubs have sprung into prominence in the past few years and expect to see a real season this year.

If you go to Canada this year I know you will enjoy what promises to be one of the greatest seasons in history.

MIAMI, Fla., Nov. 30.—In a few days Miami will fire the opening gun of the annual sports campaign, launching the six months' winter season with an intersectional football game between the University of Florida and the University of Oregon.

Aside from making Miami its first taste of big league football with the added touch of intersectional rivalry, the game will be but one of a series of notable events on the afternoon of December 7.

Chosen as the vehicle to dedicate Miami's new Madison Square Garden Stadium, it will take on the aspect of an intersectional fete with dignitaries from the two states invited heading a list of notable visitors that probably will include President Machado of Cuba, His Excellency Charles William Orr, C. M. G., governor of the Bahama Islands and President Portes Gil, in whose country football is now one of the roaring sports.

Madison Square Garden, as a testimonial friendliness to the city of Miami, through whose cooperation the stadium was possible, thus leaving the Garden free to promote boxing bouts in the newly discovered rich market of South Florida, is hearding together its 600 millionaire stockholders for a general exodus to Miami in a special train that brings them into the city the day before the game.

As in seasons past Miami offers a series of golf tournaments that brings the big-timers into South Florida in droves. There are to be a dozen or more tourneys this winter with a total cash value to the professionals of more than $30,000, while in addition, there will be thousands of dollars in plate and prizes for the amateurs.

Although Florida knows no specific season for the apostles of Izaak Walton, the winter brings a quickening of interest to the sport of the big game fishing, which in Florida attains speed uncommon in other notable fishing grounds of the world.

The Federal government estimates there are at least 500 varieties of fish in the tropical waters in and around Miami and the Gulf Stream, flowing placidly three miles off shore, is the haven for the gamesters that have aided in building reputations for Zane Gray and President Hoover as anglers.

Winter Cure Season Opens at Cuxhaven

CUXHAVEN, Nov. 30.—Beginning this year, the winter cure season will be introduced in the North Sea resort Cuxhaven. The hotels will remain open, and warm sea baths and medicinal baths will be administered as in the summer. There will also be skating on the broad moats of the historic Ritzebuttel palace garden. No cure tax will be charged in winter.

Yanks Lead Foreign Visitors in Germany

BERLIN, Nov. 30.—The German Bureau of Statistics publishes in its current semi-monthly report estimates of the tourist traffic in Germany from April 1, 1927, to March 31, 1928. The figures for this fiscal year estimate the number of foreign visitors at about 1,750,000, of whom the United States furnished 15.7 per cent. Austria was second with 15, the Netherlands third with 10, and Great Britain fourth with 7.3 per cent.

Sailors Stage Rally and Gain Victory After Scoreless Fight in First Half.

Blocked Punt Leads to One Tally Against Big Green Squad on Frozen Gridiron.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 30.—(AP.)—Waiting until the fag end of a hectic season, Navy uncorked a smashing offensive today, a brand new scoring back, and enough punch to whip a powerful Dartmouth eleven, 13 to 6, for the first and last major victory of the Sailors in the 1929 gridiron campaign.

A second-year youngster named Lew Kirn, 160 pounds of smash and go from Hightstown, N. J., was the leather-lugging Moses who led the hand-picked nephews of Uncle Sam out of a wilderness of defeat and ties that have engulfed the Navy record since the start of the season.

Thriving on the coldest November 30 Philadelphia has experienced since 1880, this 19-year-old boy, one of the "B" squad sparring-partners for the first team until two weeks ago, smashed the husky Dartmouth line for two touchdowns in the second half and all but one of the points needed to win the first game Navy has ever played with the Indians from the Hanover Hills of New Hampshire.

KIRN STANDS OUT

While 40,000 of the faithful braved the bitter winds that accompanied a temperature of 18 degrees at Franklin Field, Navy quickly got the jump on a Dartmouth team that had been beaten previously only by Yale, and never once relinquished the upper hand.

Kirn, ripping the tackles and slamming the guards, kept the sturdy Dartmouth line constantly on the defensive while Jack Gannon, veteran Navy back, sprayed his ends and backs with short passes that gained little but tantalized the Indians' secondary defenses no end.

The Sailor line, playing great football from end to end on a frozen gridiron that had the resiliency of a rock ledge, held the hard-running Dartmouth backs so completely that the New Englanders made only two first downs in the first half and five in the second. Navy piled up 12 first downs and stole a leaf from the Dartmouth book with 11 completed passes in 17 tries for the surprisingly small total of 65 yards gained. Dartmouth could complete only two passes in 14 tries for 39 yards.

FIRST HALF SCORELESS

The first half was scoreless, although Navy three times had Dartmouth in trying positions. On the opening kickoff, when hands were numbed by the cold, a Dartmouth fumble gave Navy the ball on the Big Green 32-yard line. It was too early for Navy to gain consistently and even in the second quarter, when the smashes of Kirn and Gannon's short passes for three and four-yard gains reached to the Dartmouth 23 and then 14-yard lines, the Sailors could not keep up a sustained offensive. Dartmouth never had the ball in Navy territory in the first half.

Kirn, the youngster who was ready to quit football two weeks ago until unexpected promotion brought him to the first squad warmed to his task in the second half. Taking a punt on his own 30 line, the Jersey lad ran back to his own 45-yard mark, smashed through to Dartmouth's 30-yard stripe in four lunges, and then rested while Gannon tossed five straight passes to the Green 13-yard line. Then, in a half dozen

Notre Dame Halfback Snares Toss on Own Goal Line, Races Length of Field.

BY JESS CARVER
Staff Correspondent

NEW YORK, Nov. 30.—A great lineman stopped a great halfback act today, and Notre Dame, with one sparkling gesture, struck by the flying Jack Elder, hammered out a 7-0 victory over an embattled Army eleven. A colorful throng of 82,000 forgot the wind and cold watching the fifteenth annual struggle between the Irish and the Soldiers.

Jack Cannon, bull-ox Notre Dame guard, stopped Chris Cagle, the stellar West Point fullback, and as he stopped Cagle he stopped Army. Elder, intercepting one of Cagle's passes on his own one-yard line in the second quarter, dashed 99 yards down the side lines for a touchdown, giving to Notre Dame the score needed to establish a brilliant triumph.

GAME LACKS THRILLS

Aside from Elder's great run, the blocked kick of Carideo's that just preceded it and two dashes by Cagle, the game was lacking in the thrills one would expect in a contest such as this one was heralded as being. Army's offense was carried on the slender shoulders of Cagle and the brawny ones of full back Murrell. Notre Dame depended on Elder and its two fullbacks, Moon Mullins and Jumping Joe Savoldi. But had it not been for Elder's alert defensive work, the outstanding bit of which was the touchdown run, Notre Dame would not have scored on the team Biff Jones turned loose on the Yankee Stadium gridiron today.

The play-by-play story of the Army-Notre Dame game appears on Page 6, this part.

TOSSES INACCURATE

The first downs were eight to seven, neither team completed a forward pass and neither fumbled to any extent. The Irish played a cool and calculating game of football, while the Army, sticking to line bucks for the most part, did attempt to open up once in a while by having Cagle attempt to direct an aerial attack, but his heaves were not accurate and the Notre Dame defense was too smart.

Oddly enough, Notre Dame's score was kindled from the spark struck from one of the two scoring chances Army had all afternoon. In the second period, after the two elevens had battled between the 30-yard lines during the opening period, Cagle and Murrell, who did all of the ball-carrying for the Soldiers, hammered down the field from their 44-yard line. Alternating toting the ball these two splendid players worked the oval to the Notre Dame 19 but here their offense cracked up on the rocks of an aroused Irish defense and the South Benders took the ball on downs on their own 19-yard line when Cagle's pass on fourth down was incomplete.

Mullins and Elder tried to smack off the Army tackles, but the Cadet line held as firm as Notre Dame's and finally Carideo dropped back to kick. Carlmark, Army left end, rushed in and

Breaks Give Detroit 14-13 Victory Over Georgetown

DETROIT, Nov. 30.—(AP.)—Minus the services of Lloyd Brazil, their star back and trailing by two touchdowns at the half, the University of Detroit Titans came back in the second half today to take advantage of the breaks and round out their 1929 football season with a 14-to-13 victory over Georgetown.

Nearly 17,000 persons braved a bitter cold to witness the game. The severe cold was responsible for a number of fumbles by both teams.

Brazil, who concluded his gridiron services for Detroit this year, was kept out of the final game by a leg injury.

The passing combination of Scalzi, Senator quarterback, to Hudak, Georgetown left half, accounted for both of the easterners' touchdowns. A short time after the opening of the second period, Scalzi passed diagonally from his own 48-yard line to Hudak, who ran 40 yards for the first Georgetown touchdown. Mooney kicked goal.

The same combination accounted for the second and final Senator marker. As the period neared an end, Scalzi flipped a short pass to Hudak over the Detroit right end and the Senator left half stepped across the goal line.

Mooney's kick this time was

Irish Get Grid Trophy

CHAMPAIGN, Ill., Nov. 30.—(AP.)—Notre Dame University today was announced as the winner of the Jack F. Rissman national intercollegiate football trophy for 1929, making the second time in the past five years that the South Bend institution has won the coveted prize. Purdue was ranked second and Pittsburgh third.

Announcement of the winners was made by Dr. Frank Dickinson, of the University of Illinois faculty. His system of rating is based on strength of team and opponents rather than percentages. The defeat of the Army by the SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 30.—THE undefeated St. Mary's College football team, of Moraga, Cal., today was selected to represent the West in an intersectional game which the Junior Chamber of Commerce here is seeking to arrange for December 21.

Invitations were sent to Notre Dame, Pittsburgh, Tulane and Southern Methodist University of Texas as first, second, third and fourth choice teams to represent the East.

Rockne, Propped in Bed, Happy Over Boys' Victory

SOUTH BEND, Ind., Nov. 30.—Knute Rockne was a happy man tonight because his boys—the members of the Notre Dame football team—had conquered the Army, and a slightly regretful man because he had been unable because of illness to go to New York to see them close a perfect season.

Propped up in bed, with a radio and a table full of books nearby and wearing a big smile, a far from melancholy Rockne said:

"My boys were splendid, not only today, but during the whole season.

"The game went just about as I figured. Anyone that picked the Army for a pushover didn't know what he was talking about. The Army never is soft, and against Notre Dame it always is at its best. There's tradition there, that's what makes great football games.

AD SEASON IS OVER

"From the radio account it was a very even battle, with Jack Elder's interception of that pass the only break. Our forward pass defense was hot today, and that beat the Army."

Rockne said he was glad the

Fist-Fight Marks Bruins' 6-2 Win Over Bucs

LOWREY, M'KAY COME TO BLOWS IN WILD CLASH

Fan Tosses Pop Bottle At Officials in Closing Period of Contest.

Many Penalties Meted Out to Members of Both Clubs; Champs Impressive.

By CARL W. SHATTO.

WITH fist fights, bottle throwing and the continual booing and hissing of officials thrown in as added attractions, the World Champion Boston Bruins skated to a 6-2 victory over the Pirates in a wild and untamed National Hockey League game at Duquesne Garden Saturday night.

Most of the added attractions came in the third and final period, when the members of both clubs forgot hockey and went in for roughing.

Jerry Lowrey, young Pirate center, participated in two battles in rapid succession. He first was banished for a mild exchange of blows with Taylor and he had no more than returned to the ice than he was embroiled in a slugfest with Mickey Mackay, former Pirate. The belligerents were pried apart by the officials and other players only after several minutes of effort and they renewed hostilities as soon as they reached the penalty box. After they again were separated, they were handed major penalties and it is likely that Frank Calder, league president, will see fit to hand each a fine.

FAN TOSSES BOTTLE

While the fighters were being led from the rink, a fan in the gallery added to the confusion by throwing a pop bottle at referees Mallinson and Berlanquette. Neither official suffered injury, but the play had to be delayed several minutes while the ice was cleared of broken glass.

The Pirates were severely handicapped in the fray in that they were without the services of Harold Darragh, sterling right wing, who is out indefinitely with a skin ailment and a couple of cracked ribs. Tex White attempted to fill Darragh's place in the starting front line, but the Bucs' play lacked its customary smoothness. Ren Manners, star center in the local amateur loop last season and cousin of Dinny Manners, former Pittsburgh ice hero, made his debut as a pro and performed in a creditable manner. He was signed Friday night.

Eddie Shore, long known as the league's bad boy, appeared in a new role, that of Masked Marvel, and led the Bruin attack. He sported a leather head and face gear to protect features battered up in an earlier fray.

The Bruins distributed their six goals evenly over the three periods, and most of them were tallied while one or more Bucs languished in the penalty box. The officials penalized the Pirates freely and were hissed and jeered throughout the engagement.

LITTLE ACTION AT START

Both teams concentrated on defense at the start of the first period, and there was comparatively little action until some eight minutes of play had elapsed. At this stage of the fray Hitchman was banished for tripping, and the Bucs rushed to the attack. Frederickson, skating up the center lane, dropped Thompson, Boston goalie, to his knees with a low, hot shot, and Lowrey, following his boss through, clubbed the disc from the goaler's hands into the cage even as he reached to cover it.

About three minutes later Milks and Frederickson were sent to the cooler, and the Bruins, sporting a two-man advantage, kept up a steady bombardment until they forged into the lead. Shore took a pass from Carson at the goal mouth to knot the count, and Weiland tallied on a tricky wallop to sway the advantage to the visitors as the period closed. Shore fed the puck to Weiland as the latter swept in from the boards, and Miller had little chance to save.

BRUINS ADD TO LEAD

The advantage in play in the second period, which saw the Bruins increase their advantage to 4-2, went with the penalties, each team rushing from a shortage of man power, and the penalties were so frequent that one sextet had an advantage over the other most of the time.

While Jarvis languished in the cooler, Oliver and Carson engineered a combination play that resulted in a score after seven minutes of the stanza had elapsed. Carson carried the disc up the ice, passed to Oliver as they crossed the last blue line, and the latter had a clear path to the cage.

The Pirates were quick to retaliate. Rushing to the attack when Hitchman was banished for tripping Milks, they kept the play in Bruin territory for several minutes. Johnny Mackinnon climaxed the assault by pounding his own rebound past Thompson after the Boston goaler had made a fine stop of his initial drive.

Briden drew two penalties in rapid succession near the close of the period, and the Bruins, quick to take advantage of their opportunity, promptly boosted their lead back to a two-goal margin. Gainor saw Weiland free near the cage as he came up the ice and a long forward pass left the latter in a position to beat Miller with he from fly of.

The officials were booed and hissed throughout the 20 minutes by the fans, who thought that they were handing out penalties to the Bucs entirely too freely.

The players of both clubs sacrificed hockey for thinly veiled assault and battery in the third period, and the battling became rougher as the stanza wore on.

The Bruins, satisfied to nurse their lead, confined themselves to long shots and stiff body checking, but the Pirates again were the leading sufferers from penalties, Smith and Frederickson being banished in quick succession.

The visitors, returning to their short-passing game, again capitalized their advantage in man power, Clapper taking a pass from Weiland and Oliver taking an assist from Galbraith to increase the Boston advantage to 6-2.

Near the close of the period the rough play reached the fighting stage, and Lowrey and Taylor were sent to the cooler when they squared off to exchange blows.

Lowery had no more than returned to the ice when he got into a fist fight with Mackay, and it took the players and officials several minutes to separate them.

The fighting was renewed when the players reached the penalty box and a fan in the gallery added to the confusion by throwing a bottle at the officials. Lowrey and Mackay drew major penalties, and the game was held up while the broken glass was removed from the ice. Neither Mallinson nor Berlanquette was struck by the bottle.

Only two minutes of play remained, and when jousting was renewed it was comparatively tame and without scoring until the finish.

HAWKS' NEW STAR

SOMERS—The Chicago Hawks, who oppose the Pirates at Duquesne Garden next Thursday night, finished in the cellar in the National League race last season, but have flashed plenty of power in their early games in the new race and give promise of being the loop's 1929-30 sensation. Art Somers, husky center, obtained from the Vancouver Club of the Pacific Coast League, is one of the reasons for the rejuvenation. He is the only rookie up among the leaders in the individual scoring race.

Ramblers today cinched the trophy for Notre Dame, Dr. Dickinson said.

The Dickinson national rating for 1929 follows:

Team.	Points.
Notre Dame	25.00
Purdue	23.60
Pittsburgh	22.00
California	20.00
Illinois	18.70
Southern California	17.75
Nebraska	16.82
Texas Christian	16.51
Southern Methodist	16.31
Tulane	16.27
Pennsylvania	15.00

Purdue was ranked ahead of Pittsburgh, Dickinson said, because of what he termed the superiority of Western Conference football over that played by Eastern elevens this fall. Western Conference teams won nine major intersectional contests. Four of which were victories over Eastern teams. Of the five non-conference games that Big Ten teams lost, three of them were to Notre Dame.

National supremacy, graded B, the Dickinson system, shifted to the Middle West from the Pacific Coast, where the Rissman trophy was awarded to Southern California last year.

The Trojan eleven, defeated this fall by California and Notre Dame, must defeat Carnegie Tech, December 14, to maintain fifth place. A Carnegie Tech victory would eliminate the Coast team from the first 11 teams and rank Minnesota eleventh.

In commenting upon the award of the trophy, Dr. Frank G. Dickinson said:

"I do not proclaim Notre Dame national champion; neither do I claim that Coach Rockne's Ramblers could defeat those teams ranked lower. This rating means that Notre Dame had to overcome stronger opposition as measured by the Dickinson system.

"The national rating is the product of welding individual conference and sectional rating by means of intersectional games," Dickinson said.

Detroit Tops Georgetown

blocked. Liston, on the play previously had recovered a fumble by Parsaca to give Georgetown possession of the ball on the Titan four-yard line.

The Detroit touchdowns came in rapid order in the third period. Following Parsaca's punt to the Georgetown 16-yard line, Bordeau fumbled and lost a yard. Mooney's punt was blocked and Young, Detroit end, as the ball rolled along the end zone, touched it for a Detroit touchdown. Parsaca dropkicked the extra point.

Three plays after the kickoff, Parsaca intercepted Schalzi's lateral pass and dashed 42 yards for the second Titan touchdown. The Detroit fullback missed the kick for extra point, but as both teams were offside, he got another chance. This time the kick was good.

SENATORS SUPERIOR

In addition to their superiority in the aerial game, the Senators outrushed the Titans. They gained 159 yards from scrimmage and accounted for 11 first downs while the best the Titans could do was 91 yards from scrimmage and five first downs. The lineup:

Georgetown—13.		Detroit 14.
Provincial	L.E.	Young
Liston	L.T.	Anderson
Cordovano	L.G.	Buckman
Wysocup	C.	Lardner
Walsh	R.G.	O'Halloran
Mooney	R.T.	Hart
Gehringer	R.E.	Navin
Schalzi	Q.	Van Dyke
Hudak	L.H.	Wentworth
Leary	R.H.	Storen
Bordeau	F.	Parsaca

Score by periods:

Georgetown	0	13	0	0	13
Detroit	0	0	14	0	14

Georgetown scoring: Touchdown, Hudak. Point from try after touchdown, Mooney (place kick). Detroit scoring: Touchdowns, Young, Parsaca. Points from try after touchdown—Parsaca 2 (drop kicks).

CHICAGO HAWKS MEET PIRATES HERE THURSDAY

Frederickson and Mates Eager to Even Score With Maroons at Montreal.

Windy City Sextet, With New Pilot and New Talent, To Give Bucs Severe Test.

ONE game at home and one game abroad make up the comparatively light and perfectly balanced hockey burden which the Pirate icemen will be called upon to shoulder this week. On Tuesday, Manager Frank Frederickson will lead the Bucs into Montreal for a debate with the Maroons, who spoiled the season opener here, and on Thursday the revamped Chicago Hawks, sporting a new manager and more new talent than any other club in the National League, will come here to introduce their new performers to the fans at Duquesne Garden.

In view of the fact that the Maroons were able to hand the Pirates a 5-2 setback on the ice with which the Bucs are most intimately acquainted, the Montreal puckmen, this time acting as hosts, will be odds-on favorites to make it two in a row over the locals on Tuesday. The Maroons, however, have been playing off-and-on hockey. After winning from a tough club by a fairly comfortable margin, they hand a decision to a mediocre foe. Detroit, after accepting four defeats, scored its first triumph of the season at the expense of the Maroons last Thursday, and, should the Canucks be due for another "off" day Tuesday, the Pirate chances will be far from hopeless.

HAWKS STRENGTHENED

Time was, and not so long ago, when the Chicago Hawks were homeless and without much honor in their own or any other country. Last season they finished a poor last in the league race, and it was the custom of rival managers to dust off the "welcome" sign and start figuring how much two more points would boost them in the standings when the Hawks were scheduled to come to town.

But these days are no more (worse luck) for the Hawks have a home, a large following and what is of still greater importance, a winning team. Realizing that many of the performers on the Chicago roster were no asset to any major league ice club, Tom Shaughnessy did his rebuilding in a big way when he was signed as the new pilot of the Hawks.

Tom had a fairly good foundation upon which to build in Chuck Gardiner, one of the best goalies in hockey, and Taylor and Wentworth, defense men of average ability. The Hawks were without capable defense spares, however, and Manager Shaughnessy took care of this deficiency in his customary big way by signing Taffy Abel, about the biggest man in the ice sport. Taffy was obtained from the Rangers.

FRONT LINE REVAMPED

The Hawks' front line has been completely revamped. March, Ripley and Arbour, who used to do the starting for Chicago, now are the reserve line, and Somers, at Center, and Couture and Gottzelig, at the wings, have been incorporated into the starting trio. Couture and Gottzelig are holdover Hawks who have shown great improvement, and Somers, obtained from Vancouver, is the only rookie to boast a place among the league' leadin goal-getters at this time.

Tommy Cook, obtained from the Tulsa Oilers, and the leading scorer in the American Association last season, is another rookie who has added much to the Chicago power.

The Hawks' improvement is shown in a very convincing manner in the club standings. The Chicagoans have been battling everybody to a standstill, and their reward is a place up near the top. They figure to give the Bucs their fill of battle Thursday.

Manager Frederickson and his men regard the duel with Chicago as [illegible] the utmost importance. Indications are that the Detroit Cougars and the Hawks are the aggregations that the Bucs will have to beat out to get into the Stanley cup play-offs—and the Pirates do not intend to be denied.

IRISH HERO

ELDER—Jack Elder, [illegible] halfback of the Notre Dame eleven, whose [illegible] of a forward pass and dash the length of the field produced the only touchdown of the 7-0 Irish victory over the Army.

Knute Happy Over Victory

season is finished "for now I can settle down and get in shape to start moving around again." He described the season as the toughest a Notre Dame team has been through, and said he didn't believe he ever would attempt another schedule so difficult.

"Nine tough games," he said, "not a soft one on the list. It was hard for the boys, too—no home games, and that makes a lot of difference, you know. The home crowd and the home band on your own field give you quite an advantage. But the boys have done splendidly. It was a great team and one founded on close friendships among the players."

Almost in the same breath as when he said he was glad the season was over, Rockne exclaimed, "it will be great next year, playing in our own stadium. I'm sorry that the boys who will graduate will not have a chance to play in the new stadium."

TO BE WELL SOON

Rockne said he expected to be out of bed in about two weeks, then will spend about a month regaining his strength before leaving for Florida with his family.

His physician, Dr. Robert I. Sensenich, said the noted coach was progressing rapidly, having shown steady improvement since he returned from Chicago, where he directed his team to victory over Southern California. Dr. Sensenich agreed that, unless something absolutely unforseen occurs, Rockne should be out of bed in two weeks.

He sat with his eyes closed for a few moments after the game was finished, a smile on his face, evidently enjoying to the fullest extent his team's final triumph of the season. A few moments later, he reached for his telephone and placed a call for New York, asking for Assistant Coach Tom Lieb, who has been "Rockne's body" on the field this season. He said he would congratulate Lieb, and added:

"I think I'll talk to a few of my boys, too."

ELDER'S RUN NOTRE DAME'S ONLY THREAT

Rockne's Men Fail to Display National Titular Form In Beating Army Gridders.

Irish Play Lead Safe and Are Outgained by Cadets—Scoring Sprint a Classic.

By DAMON RUNYON.

NEW YORK, Nov. 30. — Lashed along by the chillest breeze that ever swept a football field, and with 82,000 voices screaming in his ears, Jack Elder, of Notre Dame, raced 99 yards to a touchdown against the Army this afternoon.

Frank Carideo's foot added the additional point to the final score of 7 to 0 in favor of the men from South Bend.

The great Chris Cagle, one of Army's all-time football heroes, playing his last season for West Point, let fly a forward pass in the first period, with one of his own men drifting back over the Notre Dame goal line—a sure touchdown for the Soldiers, if that man caught the ball.

But it fell, instead, into the frost-benumbed fingers of Jack Elder, the halfback, who comes from Lebanon, Ky., and who is one of the fastest men afoot in all the college world. He is the A. A. U. indoor sprint champion at 60 yards, and the only man that ever beat the famous Percy Williams, Canada's Olympic hero.

ARMY IS SURPRISED

Elder was on his own one-yard line when he caught the ball. Cagle had tried the pass sort o' cater-cornered, as you might say, to the far end of the Notre Dame goal, and one of his men had slipped quietly over there as the Soldiers swung out in forward pass formation. But the pass was short of the Soldier by 10 feet and made to order for Jack Elder.

There were few Army tacklers close to him as his stiff fingers closed about the leather, and he turned away from those few along what is the left field foul line when the Yankees are playing the old-fashioned game of baseball in the stadium.

The Soldiers were taken completely by surprise. They had been driving resolutely at the Notre Dame goal and without the opposition that had been expected from the undefeated football tourists from Indiana. Before any West Pointer could make a lunge at Elder, the sprinter had a good jump on them and was fairly burning up that chalked line toward the Army's goal. He kept so close to the line that it looked as if he must go out of bounds, but this youth's feet are not only fast, but sure.

Three Soldiers whipped up in determined pursuit, and one got close enough to reach for Elder, but Elder wasn't at the end of the reach. He was three feet away, and flying. He crossed the Army goal, standing up, and bounced the leather egg up and down on the frozen ground, almost derisively.

IRISH OFF FORM

Oddly enough, that run of Elder's was the only time Notre Dame had the ball threatening Army's goal. The South Bend team did not look like the national championship contender that it undoubtedly is. It was soundly outplayed by the Soldiers from that time to the finish, but it struck an observer that Notre Dame was playing the lead safe and taking few chances. Maybe the boys wanted to give Knute Rockne a victory in the last big game of the season to cheer him up and were afraid to gamble with the lead. As far as that goes, the Soldiers played a line of football that was pretty much to the conservative side.

As the game ended, a big crowd of Notre Dame rooters poured out on the field and uprooted one set of goal posts, bearing them about the yard in triumph behind the band. Special policemen were hurriedly rallied to the defense of the other posts, which are the personal property of Col. Jack Ruppert, and the cops fought valiantly with the despoilers, but finally gave in. The rooters took those posts, too, and carried them off the premises.

Boston College Defeats Holy Cross by 12-0 Score

FORWARD PASS, 'BREAK' GIVE WIN TO EAGLES

Captain Creeden Plunges Over for Touchdown in Second-Period Drive.

Losers Register First Down On Foe's Five-Yard Line, But Lose Ball on Fumble.

BOSTON, Nov. 30.—(AP.)—The Boston College football team withstood the intense cold much better than Holy Cross, its ancient Jesuit rival, did here today and won its objective game by a 12-to-0 score.

The Eagles scored in the second and fourth periods. Capt. Creeden hit the Purple line for a touchdown after a long forward advanced the ball to Holy Cross' five-yard line. A few minutes before the end Vodoklys, an Eagle backfield replacement, intercepted a pass and ran 20 yards for the second score.

In the third period, Holy Cross rushed 55 yards for a first down on Boston's five-yard line, but O'Connell fumbled and Dixon punted the Eagles out of danger after Downes recovered. The lineup:

PITT FRESHIES TRIUMPH, 25-0

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., Nov. 30.—Crashing through to three touchdowns in the first quarter of play, the Pitt frosh experienced little difficulty in winning from the Johnstown Junior Pitt College in the Point Stadium here this afternoon by a 25-0 score.

The Pittsburghers scored their first touchdown in the first few minutes of play, when Miller broke through the line and blocked a Johnstown punt, falling on the oval behind the local goal line. Luch added the extra point on a line plunge.

Two more touchdowns were registered in rapid succession. The winners recovered a Johnstown fumble on the local 19-yard stripe and in two plays the ball rested behind the Johnstown goal line. Reeder skirted the left terminal for 10 yards and a touchdown. The try for the point failed.

Taking the kickoff on the 50-yard line, the frosh team lost little time in running up another score, Brown making a 24-yard end run for the score.

Cutri furnished the outstanding play of the game when he ran a Johnstown punt back 80 yards for a touchdown. The lineup:

Roses Game In Making

PASADENA, Cal., Nov. 30.—(AP.)—C. Hal Reynolds, president of the Tournament of Roses Committee, which selects the western representative in the annual New Year's football classic, today said that "with the grid season now at an end this group is prepared to invite the Pacific Coast contender for the East-West game."

Reynolds declined to say when the invitation would be extended, but predicted that an "acceptance from the western school can be expected shortly. As always has been the procedure, this committee will have no announcement to make."

Under the plan used in the past, the western representative announces that it has accepted the invitation of the Tournament of Roses Committee. It in turn extends an invitation to the eastern college or university, with the announcement of the acceptance coming from the authorities of that institution.

While the jumble of Pacific Coast Conference has left four teams tied for first place with one defeat each, California, the western representative last New Year's Day, has been mentioned as the most likely team to play this year, although the undefeated St. Mary's College aggregation has drawn much comment as a possible selection. The University of Southern California also has been given newspaper consideration.

Among the eastern aggregations, Notre Dame, Pittsburgh and Purdue have been frequently mentioned in connection with the annual classic, although Coach Knute Rockne has stated that his team will compete in no post-season games.

BENEDICT-TO-PRATT PASSING COMBINATION FEATURES DUKES' BEST SEASON

PASSER—Two of the mainstays of the Duquesne University football eleven which last week completed its season with a record of nine victories, one tie and no defeats were Ganzy Benedict, halfback (above), and Sammy Pratt, end. They eked a tie out of the West Virginia game in the dying moments and also won the Haskell Indians game on a pass as the call of time was drawing nigh. Both are Western Pennsylvania products, Ganzy hailing from Duquesne High School and Sammy from Langley High. Both also star in basketball, which probably accounts for the skill they display in handling the football in forward passing.

PHOTOS BY PITTSBURGH SUN-TELEGRAPH

RECEIVER—Some idea of the surehandedness of Sammy Pratt in receiving passes may be gained from the pictures above, surrounding a closeup of the Jewish star. He takes 'em fore and aft and high and low with equal dexterity. All he asks is that they throw them somewhere near where he happens to be—and Ganzy can throw a football with the best.

N. Dakota Wins, 7-0

CHICAGO, Nov. 30.—(AP.)—The University of North Dakota's football team, champion of the North Central Conference, chalked up another victory in its last regularly scheduled game of the season today by battering Loyola for a 7-to-0 verdict as the thermometer hovered around zero.

While the Dakotans outplayed the Loyola eleven all the way and kept the ball almost exclusively in the Chicagoan's territory, they were able to push over only one touchdown. The Flickertails threatened many times, but always Loyola found a last bit of determination to stem the tide and then punt out of danger.

The only touchdown of the game came in the third period on a sensational 38-yard run by Jarrett, Dakota left half back, who on the previous play had intercepted a pass on his own 39-yard line and was not downed until he reached Loyola's 38-yard mark.

Rice Loses Again, 19-0

HOUSTON, Tex., Nov. 30.—(INS.)—Playing to the smallest crowd in the history of football at Rice Institute, Rice today lost its fifth consecutive Conference game in a row to Baylor University, 19 to 0.

Baylor had little difficulty in whipping the listless Conference cellarites into line.

The game marked the end of the season for both teams.

Huntington Alumni Win Grid Battle

HUNTINGTON, W. Va., Nov. 30.—(AP.)—A 20-yard forward pass from Johnny Stuart, former Ohio State star, to Homer McCoy, Marshall College end, who ran 45 yards for a touchdown, gave the Huntington High School Alumni a 6-to-0 victory over the school squad here today.

Ens, S. Dreyfuss to Attend Minors' Confab This Week

By CHARLES J. DOYLE.

Sam Dreyfuss

Manager Jewel Ens and Treasurer Sam Dreyfuss, of the Pittsburgh Baseball Club, will leave Tuesday for Chattanooga, Tenn., where on the succeeding three days of the week the annual winter meeting of the National Association of Professional Baseball Leagues will be held.

The Pirate manager and the younger Dreyfuss expect to remain in the Tennessee city in the interests of the local club during the entire course of the minor league gathering. When it is concluded they will move to New York for the purpose of taking part in the cold-weather sessions of the major leagues.

"It is altogether likely that we will be unable to complete any deals while in Chattanooga. But we will be on the scene ready to take action if anything desirable develops," said Dreyfuss Saturday in discussing the minor convention. Owing to his recent illness, Owner Barney Dreyfuss may be unable to attend either the minor or major league sessions.

A SENTIMENTAL LOSS

When the directors of the National League convene next week, a strong feeling of strangeness will permeate their sanctum, for while they will be in the same city that has marked most of these winter gatherings, they will be removed from their beloved Waldorf-Astoria, which hotel sheltered and welcomed the baseball men for many pleasant years. The famed hostelry is being torn down, so the league rulers have to forego the pleasures that were wont to spring up along Peacock Alley. The coming meeting will be held at the Commodore, a fine spot, but without the flavor that marked the Waldorf-Astoria.

The absence of Barney Dreyfuss from the council chamber of the game would be another eventuality to be regretted by the National Leaguers. The owner of the Pittsburgh team long has been prominent in directing the affairs of the league. It is not known for a certainty whether the local magnate will be kept at home.

TRADES MAY POP

The National League folks will conduct their business Tuesday and Wednesday of next week. On the following day the magnates of the National and American will convene with Judge Landis. This joint session has become a high spot in the affairs of baseball since the year of Landis' ascendency to the commissioner's throne.

The Pittsburgh representatives at both the Chattanooga and New York meetings will be ready and eager to discuss trades. The home management makes no secret of the fact it would like to dispose of some players, provided there is an even chance for a suitable return. As many other clubs are of the same turn of mind, something should develop in a big way before the year ends.

Trojans Win Easily, 27-7

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 30.—(INS.)—Southern California's Thundering Herd, stung by the claws of the Washington State Cougars, rose in wrath today and trampled the Northerners under a 27-to-7 score.

The Cougars scored and converted in the first period.

University of Southern California scored in the second, third and final period, piling up four touchdowns; John Baker, substituting for Capt. Nate Barrager at guard converting thrice.

Washington State sprung a surprise in scoring their touchdown and leading 7-to-0 at the end of the first period. Its score was made on a long forward pass.

Russ Saunders, U. S. C., quarterback led the Trojan attack with long runs, one of them 55 yards from a punt to a touchdown, and with drives through the Couger line. The lineup:

South Hills Gridders To Be Banqueted

As a reward for their brilliant work on the gridiron this year, the members of the South Hills High School football team, winners of the Section II title of the City High School League, will be tendered a banquet in the school Thursday night.

Jock Sutherland, coach of the undefeated Pitt Panthers; Toby Uansa, Tom (Pug) Parkinson and MacMurdo, stars of the Pitt team, along with Sam Smith, former Tunnelite star and now captain of the Waynesburg College team, will be among the speakers.

Willows to Hold Indoor Golf Meet

The Willows Swimming Club will start its winter activities with a golf tournament Friday evening, December 6 in the downtown Indoor Golf Club, 313 Fourth avenue. Seventy-five members will attend and a lunch will be served at the conclusion of the golf tournament.

Dick Leibert will be among the honored guests, and will give the Willows boys and girls a demonstration of driving into the net. Other honored guests will be Miss Virginia Brandes, "Miss Willows 1929," Miss Eleanor Laurence, "Metropolitan Miss Pittsburgh" and Miss Dorothy Gildernew, "Queen of the Rivers."

Baseball Moguls Take Stage as Football Fades Out

JAMES J. LONG Sport Comment

Magnates Gather Soon.
Majors Follow Minors.
Great Gridiron Season.
Local Records Broken.
Teams Here Stand Out.
Hockey Outlook Bright.

FEW DEALS LIKELY DESPITE RUMORS

WITH football, barring a few scattered "special" games, over and gone, as far as the season of 1929 is concerned, here is baseball coming up for air again. Hardly has the gridiron pastime drifted out of the picture for another year before the diamond sport makes its reappearance.

Baseball never stays in the background for long. Even while memories of the last world series still linger, preparations for another campaign are about to be put under way. The playing season itself, of course, is far in the future, but the time is at hand for the magnates to do their annual stage-strutting.

IT'S the only opportunity the moguls get to bask in the public spotlight. Fandom loses sight of them during the remainder of the year, when the players are occupying the stage and getting all the attention.

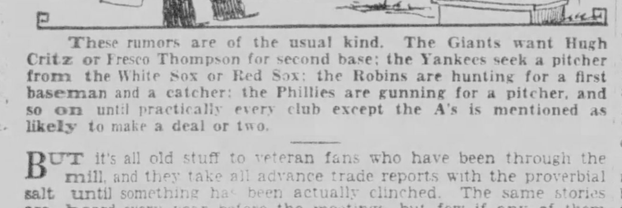
But now it's the turn of the club owners to parade in the public eye, and their doings will be featured prominently on the sport pages during the next two weeks while their yearly gabfests are in progress.

THE minor leagues will open the ball, their annual convention being scheduled for next Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, in Chattanooga. As usual, many major league men also will be in attendance, and a few minor player swaps or purchases may develop.

Following this, the big fellows will have their innings. The National League will meet in New York on December 10, the American will follow suit on December 11, and on December 12 the major loops will hold a joint session, with Commissioner K. M. Landis presiding.

THE Torporcer case looms as the only probable source of animated debate that will be of any interest to the fans while the minors are in session. This Rochester player was fined $200 and suspended for a year by President Mike Sexton, of the National Association, for an attack upon Umpire Larry Goetz in the "little world series" and "inciting a riot." The International League protests the sentence as too severe and demands that it be modified. The matter will be carried to the National Board, with Commissioner Landis also being consulted, and if the International's move meets opposition there is likely to be a lively little war before the thing is settled.

AS IS always the case when the club owners gather, the interest of the fans centers chiefly around the possibility of some major league player trades or deals being put through. And, as happens just as regularly, the air is filled with rumors that would lead the inexperienced to anticipate the consummation of a dozen or more big swaps.



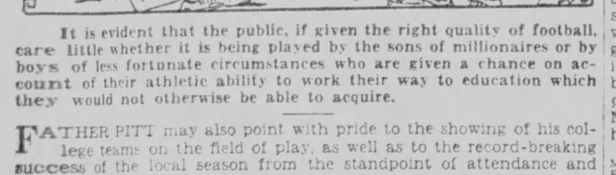
These rumors are of the usual kind. The Giants want Hugh Critz or Fresco Thompson for second base; the Yankees seek a pitcher from the White Sox or Red Sox; the Robins are hunting for a first baseman and a catcher; the Phillies are gunning for a pitcher, and so on until practically every club except the A's is mentioned as likely to make a deal or two.

BUT it's all old stuff to veteran fans who have been through the mill, and they take all advance trade reports with the proverbial salt until something has been actually clinched. The same stories are heard every year before the meetings, but few if any of them ever pan out.

Wanting a player of quality and getting him are different propositions in baseball. It isn't a question of what athlete a club wants, but of what it is willing to give up in exchange for him. Generally the price asked in playing material is too high and with both sides determined to get the better of the swap, the outcome usually is nothing more than talk.

PROBABLY it will not be different this time. The Pittsburgh club, for instance, which has made one unimportant deal by selling Sparky Adams to the Cards, would like to acquire a shortstop of high caliber, but where is there any hope of getting one? Every club owning such a player may be expected to hang on to him. Also it is being printed almost daily that the Pirates are willing to trade Grimes. Of course they are, if they can get some one better in exchange for him, just as any club is always willing to trade any player for one of greater value. But as no other club may be expected to give up any one as valuable as Grimes, the chances are that Burleigh will stay right here.

FOOTBALL'S strong hold upon the American public is attested by the fact that it probably never had so great a season as the one now passing into history, despite the Carnegie Foundation's "exposures" and other developments that, on the surface, appeared unfavorable to its welfare. Enormous crowds witnessed the big events played each week, Pittsburgh contributing to the general growth of patronage with by far the best attendance record ever made here at the games of Pitt, Carnegie Tech and Duquesne.



It is evident that the public, if given the right quality of football, care little whether it is being played by the sons of millionaires or by boys of less fortunate circumstances who are given a chance on account of their athletic ability to work their way to education which they would not otherwise be able to acquire.

FATHER PITT may also point with pride to the showing of his college teams on the field of play, as well as to the record-breaking success of the local season from the standpoint of attendance and sustained interest.

Pitt and Duquesne made truly remarkable records, and Carnegie Tech's performances, with one more big game to come, have been decidedly creditable in a season of adverse conditions. No city in the country can boast three college teams that came through the campaign with greater glory than the Panthers, the Dukes and the Skibos.

THERE is plenty of encouragement for local hockey fans in the showing that the Pirates have made to date, even though they have suffered some bumps. They have greater scoring power, the team work is 100 per cent better and the club looks like the most improved outfit in the league.

The Bucs show every promise of keeping up their good work in the two games scheduled for the new week—with the Maroons in Montreal next Tuesday and with the Chicago Black Bears here on Thursday. Probably a change will have to be made at one position, but after that the locals should be able to cope with the best in the race.

ACTION IN SOCCER CONTEST

CELTIC SOCCER TEAM WINS, 6-0

ATLANTIC COAST LEAGUE.
Providence ..... 4—Pawtucket 1

By TOM BIRKS.

Playing typical cup-tie soccer on an ice-bound field, the Pittsburgh Celtics entered the semi-final round of the West Penn challenge cup by defeating the McKeesport National Tube by a 6-goals-to-0 score at Moran Field, McKeesport, Saturday afternoon.

With zero blasts coming from the Youghiogheny River, and an even chance that the game would be called off, kept down the attendance, only a few followers of the teams braving the frigid weather to see the one-sided combat.

The Tubers did not have their full strength on the field, working conditions tying up some of the stars. But it is questionable if the Tube with its full team would have been able to hold that battling green and white aggregation from the Strip.

The Celtics lost the toss, the Tubers taking advantage of a strong wind blowing down the field. But this advantage did not stop the Pittsburghers, for the game had not been long under way, until Fleming lobbed the ball out of Davidson's reach.

The Tube were making spasmodic efforts to get to Henderson, but the Celtics middle line held the home front line easily, and when the backs were reached, Andy Robinson and Kirsopp got in some big kicks that soon removed the danger.

After 12 minutes play the Celtics again scored this time it was the persistence of Hodgetts, who pressing the Tube defense, beat Davidson from a goal-mouth scrimmage. Just before half time Marshall added the third.

With the wind in its favor the Celtic Club monopolized the second half play and three more goals were added to the Green and White total. Hynd scored from a penalty when Murray fisted the ball, and with Smith and Barrett scoring goals, all of the front line had tallied once. The lineup:

Pgh. Celtics—6.		National Tube—0.

GERMAN CLUB ADVANCES

JEANNETTE, Pa., Nov. 30.—Scoring at will, the German Sport Soccer Club entered the semi-final round of the West Penn challenge cup by defeating the Jeannette Rovers by a 6-to-0 score, here today. Neiderbocker was in fine form for the Germans, getting the ball three times. The icy condition of the field stopped both clubs from putting the finer points of the game into effect. Miller and Serra featured for the home club. The lineup:

AMBRIDGE, Pa., Nov. 30.—In a bitterly-fought battle, Ambridge and Midland played a 1-1 tie in a Beaver Valley League game here today. Harsh scored for Ambridge, one of the Midland defenders helping the ball through the goal. The Steelers scored from a penalty kick late in the game. The lineup:

Williamsport Annexes Title

HARRISBURG, Pa., Nov. 30.—(AP.)—Williamsport High School was formally awarded the championship of the eastern district of the Central Pennsylvania Interscholastic Football Conference at the annual district meeting here today. The eastern winner will meet the western sectional champion, to be named at a similar meeting in Altoona next Monday, in a post-season game on Saturday, December 7.

The meeting moved to eliminate disputes over players' ages by adopting a new regulation by which cards from the State Bureau of Vital Statistics, showing the age of each player, must be filed by all member teams of the district.

Action on dropping Wilkes-Barre, Coughlin, Hazleton and Gettysburg for failure to comply with the by-law requiring the playing of five conference games in one of two consecutive years, was postponed until the next meeting of the district board.

At the annual election, J. E. Nancarrow, of Williamsport, was elected president, and W. W. Spangler, of Lebanon, was named secretary-treasurer.

Sunnyside at Dunlevy.

Fans will enjoy their first interstate cup game Sunday when the Pierpoint Motors team, headed by Sam Parks and Carl Ekequist, invades Ohio territory to clash with the Shamrocks. Pittsburghers who remember that memorable tilt between Heidelberg and the Shamrocks will come to the conclusion that the Pierpoints will have a tough afternoon, because that fighting Irish eleven playing at Luna Park plays a rough and tough game.

If the Pittsburghers dispense with that short passing game, and go out to get goals, they might win, but the short passing game will not get them anywhere in Ohio.

At Gallatin, the Union Switch and Signal team will clash with Gallatin in the best game of the day locally. Gallatin has a good club, and defeated the Pierpoints so the Switch eleven will have to show all of its stuff in this game. Angus McNair will give the Gallatin defense plenty to worry about, for without a doubt McNair is one of the greatest forwards in this district since Johnny Jaap. One of the season's largest crowds should watch the game.

W. Va. Grid Eleven To Play Strong Foes

MORGANTOWN, W. Va., Nov. 30.—Answering the statements by some West Virginians that the University grid team of this state does not meet representative teams, Director of Athletics H. A. Stansbury dispelled that theory yesterday when he announced the Mountaineers' 1930 card, revealing another 10-game card. The program is so representative that no section, save possibly that of the Rocky Mountain district, has been left out.

Duquesne and Pittsburgh in the immediate tri-state, as well as Washington and Jefferson; Wesleyan in the state; Fordham and Georgetown in the East; Washington and Lee in the South; Detroit in the Mid-West; Kansas State in the Southwest, and Oregon State from the Far West, make up the list of opponents for the Mountaineer in 1930.

JACK DEMPSEY On Boxing

First Round Worst. For Knockouts. Boxers Are "Cold."
Can't Take Punishment. Until They Warm Up. Dempsey Cites Cases.

RISKO REAL IN-AND-OUTER

STATISTICIANS have figured it out that more knockdowns and knockouts have been scored in the first round of fights than in any other session.

All of which occasions surprise among some ring folks, who figure that because a fighter is supposed to be fresh and fit and wholly undamaged as the first round begins he certainly should be far more able to withstand a solid smash in the first than in the fourth or seventh or tenth rounds.

But that strikes me as wrong reasoning.

I've always figured it that a fighter is in far more danger in the first round than he is in any other because he hasn't been warmed up by that time. Until his blood begins to flow freely from exercise and his muscles are co-ordinating, his whole body is brittle instead of being supple.

He's like a baseball pitcher. Send him in cold, without a chance to warm up, and it takes him some time to get going right. But let him warm up, tune his muscles, get his circulation okay and he can step right in and do his best stuff.

I've always felt that the first round was the most dangerous for the man who was on defense. Naturally, therefore, I never tried any defensive tactics in the opener.

Oftentimes I could drop men in the first round while they were still "cold," and, if they got up and weathered the round, the chances were against my repeating the trick.

Take my fight with Jess Willard at Toledo in July, 1919. I flattened him seven times in the first round and scrambled him up generally. Those who try to apply logic to ring battling reckon that if I could floor a fresh fighter seven times in the first round I ought to be able to do it 14 times in the second, in view of the fact that I had battered him so savagely in the first.

But I couldn't knock him down again. Bad off as he was physically from the punching, that circulation of blood and the stirring of muscle action saved him from that.

I caught Fred Fulton while he was "cold" in the first round. And, as everybody knows, Luis Firpo nailed me with the first punch of the first round of our fight and nearly dropped me. Jack Sharkey, too, rattled me around with a punch in the first round, but as that stanza ended I was getting the effects of bettering circulation and muscles that were limbering up.

Leo Lomski, as everybody recalls, scored two knockdowns over Tommy Loughran in the first round, but couldn't do anything with him after that. And that incident is just one of a thousand that can be mentioned to show that Round One is the most dangerous of all rounds for every fighter.

The smart fighter is the one who will take advantage of the knowledge and step right out with the bell while his foeman is "cold" and proceed to swing 'em from the hips with everything he has. For his chances to win with a knockout in that round are infinitely better than in all the others of the whole battle.

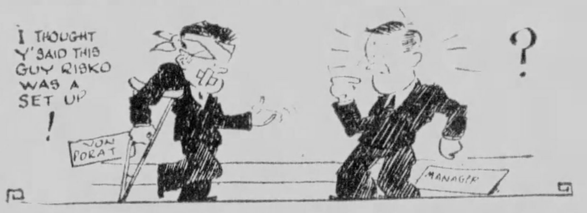
They've renamed Johnny Risko by calling him "Johnny the Risk" now. And not without reason. Johnny may never be champion. But he certainly has put the skids under plenty of the boys who seemed to be aimed in that direction.

Whenever Risko climbs through the ropes nobody can predict exactly what will happen. But it is a certainty that the happening will not be commonplace. Johnny does things in such eccentric ways that he keeps his name in the sport page headlines.

His specialty is whipping in a return match practically every man who took the decision from him in some earlier duel. I haven't "Johnny the Risk's" complete record before me, but I recall that Johnny, given the second opportunity, has spanked at least six or eight men who outswatted him earlier.

Johnny was the stepping stone that Max Schmeling used to climb to certain heights. He decided Max was "soft pickin's." And Max was—for about six rounds. Then Johnny "blew up," as men will do who haven't trained much before proceeding to set a fast pace in a ring duel.

When Schmeling stopped Risko almost everybody joined in singing a swan song for "Johnny the Risk."



The folks who handle Otto Von Porat decided that a glorious opportunity was before them. They would "sic" Otto onto Risko and, when Otto knocked out Johnny, that would add to the prestige of the rising young Norwegian.

Smart reasoning—in the case of an ordinary human. But "Johnny the Risk" is not ordinary. In proof of that statement can be offered evidence that Johnny fought Otto in Boston and gave him a violent beating. It was one of the biggest ring upsets of 1929.

Emmett Recco took a whirl with "Johnny the Risk." Most folks figured it would be just a breezing victory for Johnny. But the opposite happened. Emmett whipped Johnny in 10 rounds, much to Risko's mortification. Johnny asked for a return match. He got it. He did a little training—and then they met.

Johnny, who surprised by losing the first, created an entirely different surprise by whacking Emmett from one section of the ring to the other and winning easily in 12 rounds.

"Johnny the Risk" had K. O. Christner and George Cook well beaten in his fights with 'hem. In his eagerness to finish them he failed to keep a few of his punches up above the line. He was disqualified for that. Also, he lost on a foul to Tuffy Griffiths at a time when Duffy—not Johnny—was out in front.

Then Carroll sent his Irish warrior, Jim Maloney, to Cleveland to mix it with the "German Risk." Some of the Maloney crowd announced that "A Mick can lick a Dutchman anytime, anywhere." Johnny heard about it. His German blood began coursing swiftly through his veins and Johnny got all hot and bothered by the insult.

When the bell rang, "Johnny the Risk" took a hop, skip and jump. When he stopped hopping, skipping, jumping and tossing punches, about five minutes later, Maloney was a knockout victim.

"Johnny the Risk"—that fits the Cleveland gladiator to perfection.

County League to Open Floor Season Monday

MORRYS OPPOSE CHARLEROI IN DUQUESNE GYM

Fintex Quintet on Edge for Inaugural Battle With Lions; Gordons in Prelim.

Gyp Wunderlich Joins Lafayettes; Homestead Enters Y. M. C. A. Circuit.

By JULIUS LEVIN

THE Allegheny County League will usher in its 1929-1930 basketball season Monday night when the Morry Fintex quintet opposes the Charleroi Lions in the inaugural battle at Duquesne University.

Operating again as an eight-club circuit as a result of new additions to the list of franchise holders, this year's County League shapes up as one of the best-balanced loops ever organized in this vicinity and followers of the circuit are anticipating a close fight for the championship.

NEW TEAMS IN LOOP

Both participants in the opening battle are making their bow in the County League Monday night, although the members of the Fintex are by no means strangers to County League basketball. The downtown quintet is composed mainly of former Enoch Rauh Club stars. The Rauhs for several years were among the outstanding teams in the County League race.

The Fintex quintet includes in its lineup such well-known local passers as Bill Miller, Wy Paris and Johnny Serbin, former Rauh stars; Eddie Losman, one-time Somerman and Duquesne University center; Harvey White, captain of last year's Carnegie Tech varsity squad; Harry Siljander, all-scholastic center of Schenley High fame; Nate Lippe, former Geneva College flash, and Sammy Klateman, last year a star for the Young Men's Hebrew Association quintet, winner of the Institutional League and A. A. U. championship.

AMONG FAVORITES

This excellent array of basketball talent leads many supporters of the Fintex aggregation to believe that this team will lift the crown held by the Duquesne Lafayettes for three successive years. The local aggregation has been working out for more than three weeks and will take the floor Monday night in the best of physical condition.

While little is known of the Charleroi Lions, the Magic City is said to be represented on the floor by a powerful machine and the Fintex passers will have to keep on their toes if they hope to win the inaugural battle.

The Lou Gordon Juniors, amateur junior champions of the district two years ago, have been signed to appear in all preliminary games and they will present a strong attraction Monday night at 8:15. Preparations have been made to handle a large crowd at the spacious Duquesne University floor.

WUNDERLICH TO PLAY

Deprived of the services of George Ramsay, veteran local professional basketball center who has announced his retirement as an active player to devote his attention to banking, Ed Minnick, coach of the Duquesne Lafayettes, three times winners of the County League championship, has signed Gyp Wunderlich, star pivot man of the und[illegible] University of Pittsburgh team of two years ago, to handle that important position for the Scarlet Hurricane.

Wunderlich's addition to the Lafayettes' roster gives the Minnich charges one of the best tip-off men in the district and he should add considerable strength to the lineup.

While the dope indicates that the Lafayettes will be dethroned, Coach Minnich is certain that his club will emerge with its fourth straight title. Minnich has a large squad at his command with which to make replacements in his shattered quintet of last winter. He will have two big holes to fill due to the loss of Eddie Klein and Joey Drotar, who are working in Newark, N. J.

Minnich is not the type of basketball coach who will be caught napping. Minnich knows basketball talent and when the Lafayettes take the floor for their opener they will present a strong front.

HOMESTEAD IN LEAGUE

The Homestead Y. M. C. A. will be represented in the Saxon Inter-State Basketball League for the second straight season. The circuit, an amateur one, will include besides Homestead, Lorain, O., Cleveland West, Cleveland East, Alliance, O., Salem, O., and Farrell, Pa. The complete Homestead schedule follows:

December 14—Homestead at Farrell; December 21—Alliance at Homestead; January 4—Homestead at Cleveland West; January 11—Lorian at Homestead; January 18—Salem at Homestead; January 25—Open; February 1—Homestead at Cleveland East; February 8—Farrell at Homestead; February 15—Homestead at Alliance; February 22—Cleveland West at Homestead; March 1—Homestead at Lorain; March 8—Homestead at Salem; March 15—Open; March 22—Cleveland East at Homestead.

Westminster Loses Four Grid Stars

NEW WILMINGTON, Pa., Nov. 30.—When Westminster closed the season last week by defeating Geneva, 21-0, four of the Titans played their last collegiate grid game. These men are: Paul Campbell, Pittsburgh, halfback; Joseph Dombrowski, Elizabeth, tackle; John Hall, Youngstown, O., halfback, and Gerry Sweet, Erie, guard.

Dombrowski, the iron man, player in every quarter of every game for four years, thus winning four varsity letters. Sweet also won four letters. With 16 lettermen this fall, Dike Beede will have 12 available for next year.

Institutional Card Set

New Year's has been chosen as the opening night of the Greater Pittsburgh Institutional League schedule, according to the card announced Saturday by the league secretary. The inaugural contest finds Homewood at East Liberty Y. M. C. A. The sechdule follows:

FRANCHINIS STRONG

The Franchinis do not intend to be caught napping in the County League race this winter, judging from the caliber of stars Manager Delmanto has signed for the club. Willie Cotz will captain and play forward. Others on the squad are Demaria and Colledi, former Duquesne University stars; Clay, well-known McKeesport passer; Tracy, Foley, J. Aiello and Schrello of last year's team. The team will operate at Columbus Temple.

BASKETBALL RULES QUIZ

PLAY NO. 6.

Gregory, of Pennsylvania, and Chapman, of Michigan, are opposing each other on a jump ball. Gregory taps the ball to one side and then retaps it to one of his teammates.

What is the correct ruling?

ANSWER.

The penalty is the loss of the ball for Pennsylvania at the nearest point out of bounds, as in other violations. This covers another one of the new rules for this season, which provides that on a jump ball at center or elsewhere the jumpers are forbidden to touch the ball after it has been tapped until it has touched the floor or one of the other eight players. The exception is that the players may tap the ball more than once in attempting to make it go outside the jumping circle.

Snowflake Bowie Victor

BOWIE, Md., Nov. 30.—(AP.)—A stirring contest came with the running of the $10,000 endurance here this afternoon when Walter J. Salmon's Snowflake beat the Seagram stable's Sweet Sentiment out by a neck.

The Colostream stud's Plucky Play was third, beaten a length for the place, and S. W. Labrot's Porphyry fourth. There were 15 starters and Ned O was favorite.

GOLDENSONS OUT TO WIN LOOP TITLE

South Siders Have Fine Array of Talent Available For This Year's Race.

Stark, Rubenstein, Rosenberg, Rihanek and Holmes New Members of Quintet.

ONE of the most improved teams in this year's Allegheny County League is the Goldensons, who have added several prominent former college stars to the lineup in an effort to lift the championship. After working out for the last three weeks, Manager Sammy Goldenson has announced the makeup of his squad as follows:

John Stark, former University of Minnesota star; Jock Rosenberg, former Duquesne University guard; Moy Rubenstein, former Geneva College star; Bobby Angelo, Grove City College product; Monk Ketchel, Eddie Jesko and Eddie Siegle, of last year's team; Mel Holmes and Rihanek, former Webster Hall and Washington Moose regulars, and Shupe, a star at Geneva several years ago.

The Goldensons were scheduled to open their season next Wednesday at the Market House, but the Franchinis requested a postponement to allow them time to get into proper condition. As a result the South Siders will not engage in any league games until Saturday when they oppose the Charleroi Lions at Charleroi.

The Goldensons have shown fine progress in their workouts to date and indications are that the team will enjoy its best season on the floor this winter.

Freeman, McTiernan Top Week's Battles

Tommy Boxes Manley at Garden—Buck Meets Solmen at Moose

By HARRY KECK, Sports Editor.

WITH Tommy Freeman, Erie welterweight star, returning to box the windup at Motor Square Garden Monday night, against Jack Manley, of Syracuse; Buck McTiernan, of Swissvale, returning to the Moose Temple to oppose Mickey Solmen, of New Castle, in a return main bout, Friday night, and the new dancing pavilion arena at Junction Park, New Brighton, staging its first show Monday night and the Jolly Bowl, New Castle, also open for business the same night, boxing business will be humming in Western Pennsylvania this week.

Tommy Freeman

McKeesport also was slated for a show, to be held on Thursday night, with Joe Trippe, of Rochester, N. Y., meeting Tug Phillips, of Charleroi, in a return bout in the windup, but Promoter Jim McGirr called off his plans on Saturday when he experienced difficulty lining up a new opponent for Trippe after Phillips had been knocked out in one round by Vincent Hambright in Cincinnati a few nights before.

An amateur show under the auspices of the Twenty-seventh Ward A. C., in St. Andrew's Lyceum, North Side, Tuesday night, rounds out the week's program for the Pittsburgh district.

STARS SIDESTEP FREEMAN

Ever since Freeman handed Georgie Levine a beating in the Motor Square ring some weeks ago the local fans have been demanding that he be brought back, and when the club engaged him for Monday night it found itself up against it for an opponent. A canvass of the recognized leaders of the division failed to bring a favorable response and Manley finally was booked. He is a tough youngster who has had considerable experience against the good ones. Freeman knocked out Farmer Joe Cooper in one round after the latter "defeated" Buck McTiernan here recently.

Billy Edwards, a good prospect from Erie, boxes Allen Beatty, of McKeesport, in the eight-round semi-final at the Garden. Andy Andrucci meets Frankie Moran in the second bout and Paul Balint and Red Hartley are in the opener.

Jackie Rodgers, local Negro bantamweight, who has knocked out his last three opponents, and Carl Cavelli, of Canton, O., one of his victims, meet in a return bout topping off the card at Junction Park Monday night. Cavelli has shown to advantage in other appearances in the Beaver Valley and he welcomed the chance to box Rodgers there in the hope of redeeming himself for his three-round knockout defeat by Rodgers at the Moose Temple here recently. On Friday night, Rodgers boxes Tommy Paul at Buffalo.

Romeo Pacelli, of New Castle, and U. S. Carpentier, of New Kensington, are the main-bouters at the Jolly Bowl, New Castle, Monday night.

DAVIES MEETS HUAT

Willie Davies, of Charleroi, accompanied by his manager, Jim Buchanan, left Friday night for Toronto, where, tomorrow night, Willie boxes Gene Huat, the French star, in the Canadian flyweight tournament. Both Willie and Gene were put out of the New York tournament by Black Bill.

Tommy Freeman will continue in training after his bout with Jack Manley here Monday night for a 10-rounder with Canada Lee, the Negro, at Erie Friday night.

The next amateur boxing show at the Keystone A. C., the third of the season, is scheduled for December 13.

Luke Carney, manager of Jack Zivic, has an offer from Louis Parga, Havana promoter, for Jack to appear against either Hilario Martinez or David Velasko some time in January. Meanwhile Jack plans to remain around here and box at Motor Square Garden and the Moose Club, as well as at other clubs in this section.

AMATEUR CARD COMPLETE

Following is the complete card for the amateur boxing show to be held by the Twenty-seventh Ward A. C., at St. Andrews' Lyceum, Tuesday night: 112 pounds, Tony Marino vs. Jackie Wilson; 118 pounds, Joey Leonard vs. Billy Hatch; 126 pounds, Johnny Hazel vs. Joey Gaudy and William Kemper vs. Marty Flaherty; 135 pounds, Jackie Leonard vs. Young Marms and Chuck Mullins vs. Larry Signs, and 175 pounds, Lincoln Page vs. Tony Bassone.

Ray Eberle, popular announcer, is the matchmaker for the Junction Park Club, which opens its winter season Monday night.

Tom Malco, of Soho, now is one of the cocks o' the local fistic walk as a result of his technical knockout victory over Hans Roberts in their bout at the Moose Temple Friday night. He has received several good offers for his services and will be kept busy for the next month at the Moose, Motor Square Garden, Franklin, Pa., and other centers.

KAYO STARS WITH KELLY

Bernard Kelly, Jr., of McKeesport, is the local representative of Vincent Hambridght, the Filipino, and Howard Mitchell, both lightweights, of Cincinnati, and would like to show them here against Phil Goldstein, Tommy Crawley or any other 137-140-pounders.

Hambright knocked out Tug Phillips and Mitchell stopped Chet Smallwood in their most recent starts.

Marty Simmons, Wilkinsburg welterweight, will be back from Saginaw, Mich., next Wednesday ready for action with the local talent.

CADET MENTOR PRAISES FORM OF NOTRE DAME

South Benders Capitalized on One Golden Opportunity to Win Annual Grid Battle.

Coach Lauds Cannon, Carideo, Murrell, Carlmark and Messinger for Work.

By CAPT. BIFF JONES
Head Coach, United States Military Academy

NEW YORK, Nov. 30.—Notre Dame remains the unbeaten football eleven. The colorful Nomads seized one golden opportunity and converted an Army forward pass into a touchdown after a stirring run of nearly 100 yards down the west side of the gridiron. Jack Elder, Notre Dame's sprinting halfback, intercepted a pass from Christian Cagle and sped on to a touchdown that spelled victory in capital letters for his team.

Just one Army man got close to the fleet Notre Dame star as he raced down the field. In the excitement no one identified him from our bench. The tackle made a desperate dive and missed.

Army's backfield, coming out of its huddle, deployed to its own right with Cagle in No. 4 position. The ball was now on Notre Dame's 11-yard line. The play swept to our right, and with our ends well down the field, Cagle threw a long, diagonal pass to our own left. Elder, covering deep, caught the ball intended for our man. The rest is history.

GREAT VICTORY

I congratulate Notre Dame, its football team and its coaches. I am genuinely sorry that my friend Knute Rockne was unable to attend the game. It was a great victory for the Nomads. It was a bitter defeat for us. Our regret is assuaged by the fact that Army played a good game of football.

It was a game decided by split seconds. We outrushed Notre Dame from scrimmage. The charts show that Army gained approximately 151 yards to 111 for Notre Dame.

Let us look at the game through Army glasses for a moment. Notre Dame never had the ball inside of our 30-yard line.

Army was within scoring distance several times and it rebounds to the credit of Notre Dame that we were stopped. The game was only a few seconds old when Army recovered a Notre Dame fumble. We tried a forward pass from Cagle to Hutchinson which might have been completed on a field that was not frozen. Hutchinson skidded on the frozen turn and the ball grounded.

Late in the game Cagle again passed to Hutchinson, and again the latter slipped on the frozen field. The ball was grounded. Almost at the close of the game Cagle caught a punt and came back in a serpentine whirl and was free of all Notre Dame men except Conley, who made a desperate grab and got Cagle. Red slipped in his stride trying to shift and was dragged to earth.

GROUND STOPS RUNNERS

In fact, the ground handicaped Notre Dame. Half a dozen times the Nomad backs slipped and fell behind their own line. The day was bitterly cold; far too cold for the best in football, and it must have been too cold to watch in comfort.

Cannon, Notre Dame's guard, is a sure fire all-America. He played without headguard, and we could easily follow him. There is a guard. I am satisfied with the strategy of Army's defense. It did everything to be asked or expected.

I think that Carlmark and Messinger played splendid defensive football from start to finish. They halted the rushes of Notre Dame and split the interference time and time again. John Murrell did some of the greatest kicking I've seen in many a day, having a decided superiority over Notre Dame's kicking throughout the game.

Carideo is a thoroughly smart football player, worthy of all-America ranking.

Army lost. But I am proud of the boys. They were in great condition, and played the entire game without a single substitution being made.

In another year and another game we will welcome back our friendly enemies from South Bend and try to beat them as hard as we tried today.

FIRST SEASON—Making its first appearance in football, the new Mt. Lebanon High School compiled a fine record for the season recently closed. Its team won six games, tied two and lost two. Munhall, Crafton, South Fayette, Bridgeville, Oakdale and Edgewood fell victims to the South Hills aggregation, while Arnold and the Clairton Juniors were held to ties and only Dormont and McKees Rocks scored victories over the new eleven. The school should make its presence felt in the seasons to come.

Notre Dame, Army Game Play by Play

NEW YORK, Nov. 30.—(AP.)—The play-by-play story of today's Army-Notre Dame game at the Yankee Stadium follows:

FIRST QUARTER

Cannon's first attempt to kick off squirted off at a tangent, out of bounds, and he tried again. On the next try Hutchinson took the ball and was tackled on the 21-yard line by Cannon.

Murrel dove four yards off left tackle and Murrel punted, the ball rolling dead on Notre Dame's 28-yard line.

There the Army took possession, the officials ruling the pigskin had first been touched by a Notre Dame player.

Murrel slipped, failing to gain and Capt. Cagle fumbled, recovering for a five-yard loss.

The Army ace then tried left end and was thrown by Schwartz for a one-yard loss. Cagle dropped back for a long pass. Two cadets were clear, but the throw sailed over their heads and was grounded.

Notre Dame took the ball on downs on its own 35-yard line. Schwartz and O'Conner knifed through for seven yards in two attempts. Savoldi was stopped and Schwartz punted out of bounds on Army's 33-yard line. The Army was off side on the play, however, and Notre Dame got first down on its 48-yard line.

Savoldi raced around left end but was thrown out of bounds by Murrel after a four-yard gain.

O'Conner and Savoldi bucked to within inches of another first down and the latter then made it on Army's 41-yard line. O'Conner broke through center for nine yards before being stopped by Murrel and Savoldi registered another first down on the 30-yard mark. The Irish were hitting with terrific power on straight line plays.

But the Cadets rallied and twice stopped Savoldi without a gain.

Gebert's short pass to O'Connor failed. Schwartz hurled a long pass toward the goal line but it was knocked down by Hutchinson and Army took the ball on downs on its own 30-yard line.

Murrell gained only three yards on two attempts then added two more at end. The Cadet fullback got off a fine punt that rolled to Notre Dame's 10-yard line, Gebert returning to his 24-yard mark.

O'Connor plunged two more but Schwartz punted out of bounds on the next play to Army's 26-yard line. Cagle lost his head gear in a whirl around right end, gaining three yards.

Murrel got off to a quick kick, which was downed on Notre Dame's 26-yard line before Carlmark. Schwartz failed to gain on a wide end dash and O'Connor made barely a foot at center.

Schwartz failed to gain on a wide end dash and O'Connor made barely a foot at center. The first period ended on this play, the ball in Notre Dame's possession on their 26-yard line.

Score—Notre Dame 0, Army 0.

SECOND QUARTER

Cavanaugh was at center for Notre Dame instead of Nash. On an attempted end run O'Connor was smeared by Cagle and Schwartz punted, the ball bounding backward so that Army took possession on Notre Dame's 41-yard line. The first-string Irish backfield was rushed into the fray, Carideo, Elder, Brill and Mullins taking their places as the Cadets launched an attack. Murrel plunged five yards through the line, then catapulted himself to the 34-yard line for a first down. Cagle dashed four yards around right end, but Notre Dame was offside and Army took the extra yard. Murrel hit right guard for three yards and Cagle dashed to another first down on Notre Dame's 23-yard line.

The Irish took time out. Dorlone replaced Leary at tackle for Notre Dame. Murrel was stopped at right guard, but took a nose dive over center to the 20-yard line on the next play. He gained barely a yard off left tackle and Cagle faded back for a diagonal pass. It was incomplete and Notre Dame took the ball on its own 19-yard line. Mullins was thrown for a two-yard loss by Messinger and Carlmark stopped Elder in his tracks at the other side. Mullins gained a yard and Carideo's kick was blocked by Perry, and recovered by Army on Notre Dame's 13-yard line.

The Army star was collared from behind by Law on a try at left end, but Murrel charged five yards through center.

Cagle took the ball on an end run, but was stopped after gaining two yards by Donoghue. Murrel failed to gain at guard and Cagle's diagonal pass then was intercepted by Jack Elder, who grabbed the ball on the one-yard line and raced 99 yards down the sideline for a spectacular touchdown. The Irish speed merchant hardly let a hand get within yards of him and was soon clear. Carideo kicked the extra point, and the score was Notre Dame, 7; Army, 0.

Cannon's kickoff was poor and Cagle returned it to Army's 38-yard line.

The Army captain gained a yard at left guard and Murrel head down, plunged four yards through center. The Irish were penalized 15 yards, giving Army first down on the Notre Dame 45-yard line, but Cagle's long pass was intercepted by Mullins, who raced back to his 25-yard line. A 15-yard penalty against Army gave Notre Dame first down on the 40-yard mark. Elder's pass was knocked down by Carver.

Brill and Elder gained six yards in two rushes and Carideo punted to Murrel, who was downed in his tracks on Army's 47-yard line.

The Soldiers found the Irish line impregnable and were penalized five yards for offside play. Cagle then broke loose around right end and dashed to Notre Dame's 45-yard line before he was brought down by Carideo. It was a gain of 25 yards.

Murrel's punt was brought back by Carideo to Notre Dame's 24-yard line after an Army man had failed to down the ball on the five-yard line.

Brill failed to gain at right end and Carideo's punt was taken by Cagle on his 42-yard line. The redhead fell heavily as he slipped on the frozen turf.

Cagle, carrying two tacklers with him, gained eight yards and Murrell dove over center for two more.

The period and half ended on the play.

Score: Notre Dame 7, Army 0.

THIRD QUARTER

There was no change in the Army lineup at the start of the third period. Cannon for Notre Dame, kicked off to Cagle, who took the ball on his goal line and ran it back 24 yards. Murrel smashed the line for two short gains, to the 27-yard line, but Cagle bumped into a solid wall. Murrel punted to Carideo, who returned to Notre Dame's 44-yard line.

Elder was smeared by Carlmark for a four-yard loss. Savoldi, who replaced Mullins at fullback, was stopped in his tracks and Carideo's punt went out of bounds on Army's 34-yard line.

Cagle was stopped by Twomey. Murrel plunged through left guard four yards and Cagle made a yard. On Murrel's punt, Carideo cleverly dodged back 12 yards to his 36-yard line.

Brill found a hole at right guard and went eight yards before he was tackled by Messinger.

Savoldi made first down on his 48-yard line on a delayed buck and Savoldi circled right end to Army's 44-yard line. Savoldi went out of bounds for a first down on Army's 40-yard line. The Cadet forwards were fighting magnificently against the terrific attacking power of the Irish machine, and when Brill fumbled, Humber recovered for the Army on the Cadet 37-yard line. Cagle fought his way eight yards. Murrel dove over center for first down at midfield. Cagle was forced out of bounds after a three-yard gain, but both teams were offside. Cagle hit center for a yard and Murrel bucked the left side for two yards. Cagle slanted off tackle to the Notre Dame 44-yard line, and Murrel than punted, the ball being downed on the Irish 20-yard line.

Elder failed to gain and Savoldi was forced out of bounds by Cagle after a five-yard advance. Carideo faked a punt and then circled left end for a four-yard gain. He punted out of bounds on Army's 31-yard line.

Murrel plunged two yards through center and Cagle ran around end for a first down on Army's 43-yard line.

Cagle's pass was intercepted by Nash, Notre Dame center, and it was the Irish's ball on Army's 41-yard line.

Elder was thrown for a loss and after Savoldi was stopped, Carideo tried to kick out of bounds in "Coffin Corner." He failed, the ball going over the goal line, and Army putting it in play on the 20-yard line as the third period ended.

Score: Notre Dame, 7; Army, 0.

FOURTH QUARTER

Murrel punted on the first play but Carideo was alert and returned the ball to midfield. Elder broke loose and raced to the Army's 37-yard line on an end sweep. Savoldi picked up two yards at left guard, and Brill three more through center. Elder threw a long pass to Colerick, who barely missed connections at the goal line. Mullins replaced Savoldi at fullback.

Mullins tried right end, but was forced out of bounds on the 41-yard line for a loss. Carideo split the sidelines at the eight-yard mark with a punt out of bounds.

Murrel plunged twice, gaining five yards, and Cagle was stopped by Conley at the 15-yard line on an end run. Murrel punted to Carideo, who was thrown by Price on Army's 43-yard line.

After an out-of-bounds play, Brill leaped over left guard for two yards. He was stopped cold on the next play, and Cariedo punted out of bounds on the Cadet 22-yard line.

Cagle darted to his right and let loose a long pass, but it was intercepted by Brill at the 40-yard line. Notre Dame was offside, however, on the play, and Army had the ball on its 27-yard mark.

Cagle squirmed through to the 31-yard stripe, but was dropped by Cannon for a three-yard loss on the next play.

Both teams were off side and the play was discounted.

Murrel knifed through left guard to the 37-yard line, then punted and the ball was downed by Carlmark on Notre Dame's 22-yard line.

Brill made eight yards through a gap at right tackle. Carideo gained a yard, but Mullins was stopped by Price. Cardieo punted to Cagle, who took the ball on his 30-yard line and raced 34 yards to Notre Dame's 36-yard line. The Redhead had a clear field, after shaking off three tacklers, but was dropped from behind by Conley.

Murrel bounced off the line and made three yards at right end. Cagle was thrown before he hit the line of scrimmage by Conley. Army faked a pass and Murrel gained three yards, but it was fourth down and five to go.

Cagle passed to Hutchinson, who fell in a vain effort to make the catch, missing the ball by inches. Notre Dame took the ball on downs on the 30-yard line.

Cariedo, playing for time, twice bucked center without gain. The final whistle blew before the next play, with Notre Dame the winner, 7 to 0.

Elder was smeared on a wide end run and Brill slipped, losing a yard. He barely got this distance back on the next play, and Carideo went back to punt, kicking out of bounds on the Army's 35-yard line.

Cagle was spilled for a four-yard loss by Culver, who had replaced Twomey at tackle for the Irish. Cagle passed on the run, but it was incomplete. O'Connor replaced Brill for Notre Dame. Murrel punted and the ball rolled out of bounds on Notre Dame's 10-yard line.

STRONG ELEVEN OF DORMONT HIGH SCHOOL

STARS—This football team, representing Dormont High School, recently completed a fine season by defeating its neighborhood rival, Mt. Lebanon High, and carried off its last seven battles after bowing to Schenley and Bellevue in its first two starts. Coaches Carroll and Loeffler are, respectively, former Slippery Rock and Geneva stars and have obtained fine results.

Notre Dame Beats Army

blocked the boot, the ball skidding toward the center of the field, where it was sprawled over by an alert Cadet lineman, and when the tangle was unscrambled, the Soldiers had the ball on the 13-yard mark.

Such a hullabaloo as you never heard came crashing from 82,000 throats, and many an anxious spectator swallowed his flask as he exposed his tonsils in giving vent to a loud cheer for the Soldier boys.

IRISH LINE HOLDS

Cagle and Murrell hurled themselves at the savagely fighting Irish forward wall, but all they could gain was a measly two yards. Then Cagle, starting as if to cruise about the Notre Dame right end, let a pass fly in the general direction of Carlmark, who was across the goal line and in the clear. But Elder, coming up from behind defensive position in the end zone, leaped into air and pulled down the ball just short of Carlmark's outstretched arms and was off, cutting straight down the right side of the field, outrunning the frantic Army backs and hitting likety-split across the line. Then Carideo booted the ball squarely between the uprights for the extra point. That was that. The ball game, as far as the Army was concerned, was over. Mr. Cannon took up dominating position in the play for the remainder of the afternoon, his brown head bared to hit the breeze, crashing through the Army line, smearing Cable before he could hit the line of scrimmage, making holes for his own backs to pick up few yards on spinners and line smashes and racing down the field under Carideo's punts. Jack Cannon, an all-America for me any day and for most of the 82,000 that watched him in action this afternoon.

ARMY FIGHTS HARD

The Soldiers refused to quit, thought the weak line made it very, very difficult for the hard-trying Cagle and Murrell. The latter gave a very fine exhibition of line bucking, handicapped as he was by having to bang up his head on the backs of his own linemen.

Twice, in the third period, Cagle made brave attempts to get away, seeking to carry his team, willing but weak, to a triumph by his own individual brilliancy. It was his last sortie against Notre Dame, you know, and he wanted to beat the Irish above all else. He was doomed to failure, but he carved himself a niche in the ranks of the famous by his sturdy efforts.

His best effort, and the one that came the closest to achieving the end he sought, came in the fourth quarter. Carideo punted from his own 30-yard line. Cagle taking the ball on the run on his 21-yard mark. Twisting and squirming, the red-haired cadet shot through the Notre Dame team, and, by a splendid piece of side-stepping, broke loose on the Irish 33-yard line. But twisting past the last man, he slipped, and before he could regain his stride, Conley, Notre Dame left end, cut him down from behind.

The Irish played mighty smart football. They put that second period touchdown in their hip pockets and sat there all afternoon. Carideo kicked well and he kicked often. He used Elder and Savoldi alternately throughout the third period, and in the final quarter shifted to the Mullins-Brill combination.

Neither eleven completed a forward pass. Army attempted six and had three intercepted. Notre Dame tried three, all of which were incomplete. They did not throw one during the second half.

GAME CLEANLY PLAYED

The game was hard, but cleanly played, both elevens evidenced a spirit of fine sportsmanship with the Cadets aiding fallen Irishers to their feet and Irishers lending helping hand to stumbling soldiers.

A demonstration like unto the one that wound up the Tech-New York University game in the same park Thanksgiving was put on after the game. The goal posts were ripped out and carried about the field by parading Notre Dame enthusiasts. The Yankee Stadium is now on the nut for two sets of goal posts, which, if laid end to end, make up a rather bad week.

The Cadets corps lent lots of color to the affair, as Cadet corps will. They never quit cheering for their team, but Jack Cannon never quit smacking it down, so the cheers were in vain.

Crowd Rushes Gates As Cadets Arrive

Celebrities of Football World Sit in on Army-Irish Clash.

By JESS CARVER, Staff Correspondent.

NEW YORK, Nov. 30.—The crowd which shivered through the game between the Cadets and Irish in the Yankee Stadium here this afternoon started to gather as early as 11:30 in the morning.

With the arrival at the railroad siding near the park of the Army special trains, and the maneuvers of the Cadets as they prepared to march into the Stadium, the swarms of fans, many of whom had paid as high as $50 for a single ticket, rushed the gates.

The Army wore gold uniforms, sweaters and socks and tan helmets. Notre Dame wore its blue outfits. The only player on the field who did not wear his helmet was Cannon, the crack Irish guard. Cannon is partially deaf, and cannot hear the signals well with the close-fitting headguard in place.

One of Carideo's punts cut the sideline mark at the eight-yard line. The Notre Dame field general's booting was not up to snuff, but, then, it didn't have to be.

MURRELL, CAGLE FAIL

Murrell and Cagle were pathetic figures as they walked off the field with their arms about each other's shoulders after the game. The contest marked the final Eastern appearance of the Army veterans.

The stands were filled with football celebrities. Included among the coaches and other notables here for the game were Pop Warner, Glenn Thistlethwaite, Bob Zuppke, Elmer Layden, Jock Sutherland, Bob Waddell, Cam Henderson, Dr. Hube Wagner, Andy Kerr, Lloyd Jordan, Vic Hansen, Lou Andraes, Dr. Clarence Spears, Alex Stevenson, Tom Keene and Frank Revouir.

Frank (Bull) Brown, American Association umpire and well-known fight judge, of Pittsburgh, occupied a seat in the press row. There were 42 sports writers in the press section and a half-dozen non-writing experts.

A fire broke out in an apartment house next to the Stadium just before the game ended and the establishment of fire lines helped to make the traffic situation leap from bad to worse to terrible. It took 1 hour 45 minutes to come from the Stadium to the Pennsylvania Hotel in a taxi. The jams about the subway stations and at the elevated stops were fierce.

CADET BAND PLAYS ON

The Cadet band kept up an almost continuous concert, despite the chilly blasts. The well-drilled soldiers cheered heartily throughout the game, but so did the rabid Irish rooters, and it's hard to beat an Irishman when he wants to yell.

Carlmark and Messinger, Army ends, played a fine game and gave the off-tackle attack of the Irish trouble galore.

Mercer County Gridders Plan To Enter Pitt

UNIVERSITY OF PITTSBURGH may have three Mercer County backfield men in its freshman roster next fall. Jimmy Dunn, of Grove City, and Joe Hardy and Mike Sebastian, of Sharon, are to enter that school next fall, according to plans.

Navy Beats Dartmouth

plunges, Kirn carried the ball over for a touchdown.

NAVY BLOCKS PUNT

A few moments later, Bob Bowstrom, big Navy tackle, blocked Bill Morton's kick on the Dartmouth 48-yard line and Moret, Navy end, chased it all the way to the Green 12-yard line before recovering it. In four smashes Kirn laid the ball on Dartmouth's one-yard line as the period ended. He carried the leather over for the second touchdown on the first play of the fourth quarter and Gannon passed to Clifton for the extra point.

A poor kick by Bowstrom that slanted off into McCall's arms on the Navy 34-yard line, gave Dartmouth its first scoring opportunity in the final period. McCall and Wolff eked out one first down through the line before Wolff shot a forward pass to McCall from the 22-yard line that was good for an easy score. The try-for-point was block and though Morton threw flocks of wild passes in the final minutes, the Big Green was never dangerous again.

The victory closed a mediocre season for Navy. The Sailors, picked as one of the most formidable elevens of the East at the outset, lost both to Notre Dame and Pennsylvania and were tied by Georgetown and Princeton in the major contests.

De Paul Is Winner Over St. John's, 19-7

NEW YORK, Nov. 30.—(AP.)—De Paul University of Chicago staged a fine fourth-period rally today to win an intersectional football game from St. John's College of New York, 19 to 7. Byers, De Paul halfback, scored every point for the Chicagoans, putting over two touchdowns in the final period to win. De Paul tallied in the first period on a 20-yard run by Byers, but St. John's came back in the third period to take a one-point lead when Mergolas marched 24 yards around right end for a touchdown and Sheppard's pass to Kaplan netted the extra point. The touchdown that put De Paul in the lead came in the last period after a march of 40 yards. Byers added the extra point after scoring. He followed this play a few minutes later by breaking through the St. Johns' right tackle 47 yards for a final score.

Next season Virginia will play every Southern Conference member in the South Atlantic group except North Carolina State. The games with Maryland, Washington and Lee and North Carolina will be played on Lambeth Field.

TWO GOALERS

Hughie McCormick, former London, Ont., star and prior to that a crack amateur, will again be under-study to George Hainsworth in the Canadien nets. Canadiens are one of the few teams in the National Hockey League carrying two goalers.

Yank Vets to Get Winter Conditioning

FRENCH LICK, Ind., Nov. 30.—(AP.)—Some of the veteran stars of the New York Yankees will be brought to French Lick Springs in February for a general physical conditioning, preliminary to going to the training camp at St. Petersburg, Fla., according to Jacob Ruppert, owner, and Edward G. Barrow, business manager, of the team who have been here for two weeks.

Players named as possibilities for the French Lick trip are Ruth, Gehrig, Hoyt, Pennock, Johnson, Hargraves, Dickey, Coombs and such others as Manager Shawkey may wish to send.

Ruppert and Barrow will depart Monday for Chattanooga, Tenn., to attend the meeting of the association of minor leagues, where, it is expected, another deal affecting the Yankees will be announced.

Big Game Hunters Begin Invasion of Mountains

NIMRODS ENJOY GREAT TIME AT CAMP QUARTERS

Sportsmen Set to Start Annual Quest of Deer Herds Early Monday Morning.

Thousands Get Hunting Licenses to Seek Elk in Wilds of Keystone State.

By GIB MARSH

CLAD in their red-trimmed garments and armed with their high-powered sporting rifles the big-game hunters will open hostilities on the bucks of the Pennsylvania deer herds Monday.

And as it is estimated there will be 250,000 hunters in the woods, there is a rude awakening in store for those male deer which have been grazing in peace with their groups of does for the past year. During the first hour of the curtain-lifting session shots will be heard from every direction which will start the deer milling about the mountains, and with the herds scattered the reports of the rifles will be less frequent. The limit is one buck, with two points on its antlers, per season and six bucks per party or hunting camp. The season on elk opens, too. The limit is one elk per hunter.

Gib Marsh

It is estimated that the kill will total 18,000 head or better, which will be a new record. If that number is killed Pennsylvania will take its place along with the famour deer hunting states, Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota. In those states the kill averages 18,000 head per season. It is believed that not at any time since the hunters' license act was passed in 1913 has there been such a fine grade of bucks in the mountains. By the benefits of a year's protection these bucks, especially those which were 18 months old last year, now have the size and grade which will make desirable trophies for the hunters. Hundreds of deer, 250 pounds and over, will be bagged this season in the opinion of those who have made a survey of the deer herds.

JOURNEY TO CAMPS

DURING the past week thousands of hunters journeyed into the mountains to put their camps in order, making them comfortable and packing in supplies. Although erected in the most isolated sections of the mountains hunting lodges can be most comfortable, thanks to the modern inventions of hot water heaters, cooking stoves and other devices planned for the comfort of man. Many of these camps are provided with bath tubs. Yes, the modern big game camp includes about every comfort obtained in a city dwelling. About the only hardships experienced in the Pennsylvania mountains by big game hunters is that last few miles of the tramp back to the hunting camp with weary legs.

Deer hunting is a splendid sport. It provides a splendid means for an outing and recreation and at a time of the year when the woods and brush have been stripped of foliage, when the air is keen and includes everything to put the human body in condition to endure the hardships necessary to withstand when hunting big game.

While the hunter may return to the camp, tired and hungry, never did that hunter enjoy a supper so much. Then a pipe in front of an open-hearth fire or one of those large egg-shaped stoves until that honestly-earned drowsiness forces the hunter to bed where eight hours of dreamless slumber is enjoyed. But wait. What a breakfact that big-game hunter disposes of the next morning. There is but one breakfast menu in all big-game hunting camps. It includes buckwheat cakes as large as dinner plates, fresh sausage or ham or bacon and fresh eggs. And the quantity of hot cakes the hunter can dispose of. At home this same hunter would be indifferent to this camp fare. I have known of a number of these fussy breakfast eaters eat at their homes, display their indifference to the foods their mothers or wives have set before them and those wives and mothers would never believe those sons or husbands could dispose of such a morning meal as served them at camp.

WORKS MUSCLES

A WEEK in the mountains at this season of the year works near miracles with the body and brain, and the hunter returns to the city fit in every way. As a matter of fact, I know many hunters who were formerly small game shooters who have passed up forever the sport provided by the scatter gun for the pleasures experienced in the pursuit of deer in the Pennsylvania mountains.

While the season on elk opens along with the curtain-raising session of the deer, but a small number of hunters make the elk their objective. Some will be killed, probably 40 or 50 head, but as the elk range over the most isolated sections of the mountains, regions almost inaccessible, they are not extensively sought.

However, many bears will be killed, likely 400 or more.

Deer must be shot with a rifle or with a shotgun loaded with a pumpkin ball. The use of buckshot is not permissible under the game code.

That there will be some accidents there is no doubt. However, not so many as experienced in the small game season. Surveys of the accidents and casualties by the game commission show that the majority of hunting accidents are during the small game season.

MANY MISHAPS

IN former years when the deer season opened November 20, which found deer hunters and grouse shooters in the woods at the same time there were many accidents. Accidents were so numerous that the lawmakers of the state decided to separate the big and small game seasons.

By donning red-trimmed garments minimized accidents, but because of careless handling of rifles many deer hunters are killed or wounded every season.

Careless pointing, such as a hunter shooting at a fellow hunter, mistaking the latter for a deer, are not so frequent. However, ordinary caution will preclude accidents and casualties.

58-2 Shot Wins Race

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 30.—(AP.)—Over a good track and before a fairly good crowd, E. E. Watson's Kiyi, a long shot, was a driving winner of the Roosevelt Hotel purse at a mile and a furlong, here today. Talladega ran second and the favorite, The Huguenot, was third. The winner paid $58.70, $19.80 and $5.70.

Talladega had his speed and ran into an early lead, but was pushed by Erin Go Bragh and The Huguenot. The leaders ran well bunched to the far turn, while Kiyi was back about fifth, and going very easily. Around the turn Kiyi was taken to the middle of the track, he circled the field and closing strongly, won going away by half a length. Talladega beat The Huguenot five lengths for the place.

Whirl of Thanksgiving Season Leaves Debutantes Weary

Many Parties Are Still on Calendar For Coming Weeks

By PATRICIA PITT

WITH three and four entertainments a day throughout the Thanksgiving season, the debutantes must be a bit weary. But with the resilience of youth, they'll all be ready to dance through every day of gay old December with its grand climax, the Yuletide fortnight.

This week and the following there'll be many debuts, and many events, too, for those who've lost count of their seasons.

But before we start enumerating our many social blessings to come, let's talk over these fascinating Thanksgiving week events.

Mildred Burgwin Is Bride

Yesterday one of the most notable weddings of the fall took place—that of Mildred Carlisle Burgwin, daughter of Maj. Augustus Burgwin, and Richardson King Wood, of New York.

The marriage took place at 4:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon in the Church of the Ascension, with the Rev. Dr. Percy G. Kammerer, dean of Trinity Cathedral, as officiant. The church was simply decorated with palms and white chrysanthemums.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a distinctive gown of old-ivory satin, made in medieval style with the train of Duchesse lace over satin falling from the high waistline in back, and ending in points in the front. Her veil was of tulle, banded with rose point lace, and her flowers harmonized with the rich color of her satin gown.

Her only attendant, her cousin, Mrs. Charles Burbank Crockett, of New York, formerly Mary Phillips Burgwin, of Pittsburgh, wore a similar gown, fashioned of capucine moire. Her hat was of tulle in the same color, off-the-face in front, and long in back. And she carried autumn flowers.

Henry St. Denis Nettleton, of London, England, was best man, and John Adams Abbott, of Concord, Mass.; John Brooks Wheelwright, of Boston; Roger Shaw, of New York; George Stevens, of Atlanta; Howard James Burgwin, of Pittsburgh, and Lloyd Lowndes, of New York, were ushers.

Following the wedding was a reception in the home of the bride's cousins, the George Collinson Burwins, of Bayard street.

After December 20 the young Woods will be at home in New York.

On Friday evening Arthur Holland, of Washington, gave a dinner in the Pittsburgh Golf Club for out-of-town guests and Pittsburgh friends, too.

Besides some Pittsburgh folks, who now spend much of their time in New York, and who came home for the wedding, out-of-town guests included Mrs. Mar-

HOME from an Italian wedding trip is Mrs. William Ethelbert McConnell, formerly Miss Audrey Jenks, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Jenks, of Morewood Heights. Their marriage took place on August 22 in the First Baptist Church, and was one of the most attractive weddings of the late summer season. Dr. and Mrs. McConnell are now at home on Elmer street. Before her marriage Mrs. McConnell was entertained at many events.

Two New Buds Make Their Bow On Thanksgiving

THANKSGIVING did not go by without giving the social world two new buds to grace November. The first to make her bow was Frances Preble Reed, daughter of the junior James Hay Reeds, of Castleman place, who was presented at a tea dance that afternoon in the Pittsburgh Golf Club.

Autumn Flowers Grace Club

Large urns of yellow and white chrysanthemums made the club lovely, and a screen of palms and bamboo separated the orchestra from the ballroom. The deb's gift bouquets were attractively displayed in the drawing room. The bud wore an informal gown of nasturtium chiffon in princess mode, with a close hat of arab brown velvet. Her mother wore wood brown chiffon with matching hat. Other buds assisted.

A buffet supper that evening in the Allegheny Country Club was given in honor of Rosamound Thomas Fitch, by her mother, Mrs. Chester Marsh Van Kleeck, of East Drive, Sewickley, to introduce her to society. Yellow chrysanthemums and roses were used to decorate the club and the bud and her mother received in the drawing room, where her gift bouquets were charmingly displayed.

Rosamound wore a gown of forget-me-not blue satin, with deep collar and cuffs of lace, and with the skirt extremely long. Mrs Van Kleeck wore blue transparent velvet.

Many Aids Assist Debutante and Mother

Mrs. Van Kleeck had asked to aid her Mrs. Charles Layng Doyle, Mrs. Daniel E. Nevin, Mrs. Franklin T. Nevin, Mrs. Wilson A. Campbell, Mrs. John Shaw George, Mrs. Richmond F. Ball, Mrs. Stuart H. Robinson, Mrs. Howell C. Cooper, Mrs. Walter J. Wilson, Isabella Douglas Baldwin ,Henrrietta McGeary and Margaret Adair.

And asked to aid the bud were other debutantes, who were Mary Franklin Robinson, Harriet Fickes, Joan Diehl, Caroline Crittenden, Peggy Milligan, Katherine Collin, Mary Elizabeth Floyd, Rebecca Doyle, Susan Potter O'Neil, Melus Rodes, Margaret Shaw Rose, Anne Allen Rose, Sylvia Robertson and Marie Louise Bickford.

During the coming month many more girls will make their bows to the social world. Tomorrow evening Mary Maccoun, debutante daughter of the Andrew Ellicott Maccouns, of North Braddock, and Baltimore, will come out at the first Monday German of the Bachelors' Cotillion, to be held in Baltimore, of course. Before the dinner Mary's father and mother will give a dinner in the Hotel Belvedere for her.

On Wednesday, Peggy Milligan, popular debutante daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Robert Milligan, will be presented at a tea in the Irwin avenue residence of the Milligans, and Anne Stewart will be introduced at a dance in the Pittsburgh Golf Club on Friday.

On December 11 Mary Franklin Robinson, attractive debutante daughter of the William Christopher Robinsons, will make her debut at a tea in the Robinsons' Ridge avenue home.

MISS ELEANOR CHALFANT, daughter of Mrs. Henry Chalfant, of Ridge avenue, whose engagement to John Crossan Cooper, Jr., son of the John Crossan Coopers, of Baltimore, has been announced. Miss Chalfant is a well known member of the younger set, and a descendant of one of the oldest and most prominent Pittsburgh families. Her betrothal was announced at a small dinner party given recently in her home, Ridge avenue, at which her brother and sister, the Clarence Wheelwrights, of Baltimore were guests.

School Set Swells N. Y. Stag Lines

By CHOLLY KNICKERBOCKER
Universal Service Society Editor.

NEW YORK, Nov. 30.

OUR younger, more impulsive set adores the Thanksgiving season.

While I doubt if many of New York's daughters of wealth and fashion are cognizant of the real meaning of Thanksgiving Day, of the heart-breaking struggles of the Plymouth Pilgrims up in New England almost 300 years ago, etc., they certainly know, in this modern jazzy age, that Thanksgiving is a time when all the "prep" school lads and college boys are at home for a holiday—and to provide bigger and better "stag lines" at the debutante entertainments.

This year the Thanksgiving season offered a galaxy of parties for the "jeunesse doree" of the "debbies" who have been having a gala time.

Brilliant Party

Par example, let us take the very brilliant Garvan party the other night at the Ritz-Carlton in honor of "Peggy" Dunne.

A small fortune was expended on the flowers that decorated the foyer and ballroom of the Madison avenue hostelry. The finest dance music was obtained and a delicious supper served. It was indeed, a party.

Institute Helps Foreigners to Feel at Home Here

Y.W.C.A. Group Aiding Aliens Adjust Selves To American Customs

By MRS. CHARLES M. BREGG

DO you know—

How many nationalities are represented in the cosmopolitan population of Pittsburgh?

How many churches of different nationality background there are in the city?

What consuls representing foreign countries there are in the city?

Where a person wanting to learn English can obtain instruction?

What national foreign lodges are here?

What national customs are observed in the city?

How to solve international family problems?

How many students from foreign countries are enrolled in local colleges?

What foreign newspaper publications there are in the city?

All these questions are asked in the current issue of the Young Women's Christian Association News, together with the information that replies to the queries may be obtained at the International Institute, 3535 Forbes street, Oakland.

Serve Teas Thursdays

Just now, when the International Institute is preparing to move into its permanent home at 405 Dithridge street, it is timely to chat a bit about the work of this particular branch of Y. W. C. A. activity. If you would learn first hand of the many interesting things International Institute does, the institute staff is at home every Thursday afternoon and happy to serve you with a cup of tea.

This staff of 14 by the way, is able to speak 15 languages. Besides Miss Katherine Lawless, the clerical secretary, there is the case supervisor, the director of activities, a clerical staff of four and a nationality staff consisting of Jugoslav, Hungarian, Italian, Polish, Czechoslovak, German, Greek and Syrian secretaries.

And when you do call be sure to allow yourself a few extra minutes in which to inspect that most interesting guest book in which are the signatures of famous personages from all over the world, among them Prof. Varlez from the University of Ghent, who is head of the emigrant department of the League of Nations; the woman senator from Galisia to Poland, a noted Rumanian petrologist, and a Polish physician, all world known.

Growth Rapid

Since 1910, when the first institute was started, the movement has developed into 52 institutes in 19 states. The work began as a result of the study of conditions surrounding a large number of foreign girls, who were trying to adjust themselves to their newly adopted country and its tongue. The essentials named in developing international institutional work are always: The national community as the unit of approach; work conducted on a city-wide basis; nationality workers as a necessity; an international basis for both activities and staff; American leadership as a neutralizing element; the use of both case-work and group-work methods; participation in community organizations.

One of the most recent pieces of work engaged in by the institute is the furnishing of a social room in the Hancock School, where adult immigrant education is taught. The Pittsburgh Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, the American Citizenship League, the League of Women Voters, Pittsburgh Section, National Council of Jewish Women and other groups are co-operating with the institute in furnishing the room, together with a kitchenette.

Conducting Surveys

Another important piece of work is being done in two surveys, the first upon request of the national board regarding the distribution, economic conditions and needs of foreign groups and the assistance which institutes can be to these groups. The second survey is concerned with Mexicans in the Pittsburgh district who have been coming here in great numbers since 1920.

When the institute became possessed of a home its group activities grew and it now serves as an international house for the student groups of the university. Only recently a choral group was organized and is meeting each Tuesday evening under Mrs. James H. Greene's direction, learning to sing the folk songs of the different countries as well as those of the adopted land. The institute also does an extensive service in looking after individuals and families.

School Set Swells Stag Lines in N. Y.

However, it was past 11 o'clock when the "debbies" began to assemble. Shortly afterwards supper was served and later dancing was resumed until 3 a. m., when the orchestra broke into the strains of "Home, Sweet Home," leaving the "debbies" and the "stags" standing bewildered in the ballroom.

They were all dressed up, all "pepped up"—with nowhere to go.

But it might interest the "reformers" to know that they did not go home to their beds. Not at all.

The 3 a. m. edict is nothing short of idotic, and I am delighted to note that many hostesses who still can think for themselves — and who really have a desire to keep the "debbies" among their friends and out of places they have no business to frequent—are having their invitations engraved "dancing at 11 o'clock" and are omitting the words "from 10 until 3."

Incidentally, it appears to be the hostesses who are not exactly certain of their social status who are playing up to the "reformers."

Joan Diehl Makes Bow

AN interesting debut was that yesterday afternoon of charming Joan Diehl, daughter of the Ambrose Nevin Diehls, who made her bow at a tea dance her mother gave in the William Penn Hotel.

Joan, gowned in gold lame, received with her mother, in black velvet and lace, in the Urban room of the William Penn Hotel, before an embankment of cibotium ferns and bamboo. On either side was a table, covered in black and gold, for the debutante's gift bouquets.

The silver room was transformed into a small garden with a fountain playing in the center, and in the ballroom the tea table was placed, covered with gold and black, and centered with chrysanthemums. Hothouse fruit was placed at either end of the table, lighted by candelabra. And tea was served at small tables.

Among the guests were the John Eddys, of Seattle, Wash., and the Arthur Butler Grahams, of New York, all house guests of the Diehls.

The debutante asked to serve as her aids Nancy Allderdice, Caroline Crittenden, Harriet Fickes, Frances Forsyth, Mary Elizabeth Floyd, Virginia Wright, Rosamond Fitch, Frances Reed, Lydu Irish, Rebecca Doyle, Katherine Collin, Laura Evans and Frances Johnston, all sister buds. She also asked to assist her Mary Shiras, Josephine Nicola, Helen Leovy, Mrs. Clarence Stanley, Mrs. Alan Humphreys, Mrs. Reginald Quaile, Mrs. George Love and Mrs. Edwin Hodge.

Debutante Supper

AND another event of yesterday was a buffet supper the J. Frederic Byerses gave in the Allegheny Country Club for Virginia Frew Wright, Emily Berry Frew, Peggy Milligan and Mary Franklin Robinson, all debutantes of the season.

Presents Daughter

ON Friday Mrs. Isaac Biddle Thomas, of St. James street, gave a luncheon in the Pittsburgh Golf Club to introduce to society her charming daughter, Elizabeth Utley Thomas. Covers were laid for 175 guests and the tables were decorated with amber bowls filled with hothouse fruits. Seasonal flowers and ferns were also used. And receiving with the bud and her mother was Mrs. D. F. Royer, of Haverford, Mrs. Thomas' cousin.

The blonde bud looked lovely in a princess gown of silver and green lame and a hat of black velvet. Mrs. Thomas chose a gown of black satin and a hat of black velvet and Mrs. Royer, black velvet with a hat to match. And all three had orchids.

Nieces Honor Guests

ON Friday night Charles Oliver, of Termon avenue, North Side, gave a dinner-dance in the Pittsburgh Club for his two nieces, Rebecca Doyle, debutante daughter of the Charles Layng Doyles, of Sewickley, and of Sara Ross, daughter of the John H. Rosses, of Madison, N. J. Sara made her bow in New York last winter. Another guest at the ball was Dorothy Dodson, daughter of the Alan Dodsons, of Bethlehem, Pa., who, with Miss Ross, is a guest at the Doyle home.

The tables were arranged in the ballroom, decorated with ferns and palms and seasonal flowers.

Rebecca wore pale blue moire, and Sara, ...ored net, both fashioned very long, and fitted to the figure.

Buds Model Gowns

ONCE more Thanksgiving Day has gone by, but another holiday season will soon be here, I was reminded at the annual sale of the Woman's Exchange in the urban room of the William Penn on Wednesday, when a novel display of cheery Christmas packages and bright toys was held.

The season's lovely young debutantes modeled gowns in new colors and modes. I noticed particularly Katherine Collin, who was modeling a charming tea gown of golf cloth and lace, and near her was Frances Forsythe, wearing a negligee of turquoise blue velvet and Duchess lace, chatting with Harriet Fickes, who was wearing a long gown of shell pink crepe. And there was Mary Elizabeth Floyd, who so recently made her debut, in an exhilirating cardinal red pajama ensemble, and walking with her was Mary Franklin Robinson in a similar ensemble of rose velvet. A hostess gown of black velvet, straight and long, with touches of cream lace was worn by Neil Stewart Zang.

Mrs. Gordon Fisher, assisted by Mrs. Dorwin J. Donnelly, Mrs. W. B. Trainer, Mrs. A. Rex Flinn and Mrs. Herbert Dupuy, was in charge of the home-baking department of the exchange. And with them was Mrs. Richard Beatty Mellon gowned in claret crepe and Mrs. William Christopher Robinson in flame red crepe and black hat. Mrs. Herbert A. May, I noticed, was attired in a gown of English green.

And I saw those charming buds, Laura Evans, Helen Pendleton and Emily Frew, chatting by the large turkey grab bag displayed in the center of the room. Susan O'Neil and Caroline Crittenden were there later, and modeled negligees, with Harriet Ramsburg and Virginia Willock.

Medical Auxiliary To Give Benefit

A BENEFIT at the Pitt Theater is being planned for January by the Woman's Auxiliary to the Allegheny County Medical Society. The auxiliary members, 150 of them, met in the Hotel Schenley Tuesday afternoon and heard a talk on cancer by Dr. A. J. Breucken. The speaker emphasized the necessity for early diagnosis and prompt treatment where there is even a suspected case. He illustrated his talk with colored lantern slides. Mrs. J. I. Johnston and Mrs. James Wallace presided at the tea table during the social hour.

Remodeling Homes College Club Topic

AN interesting topic is announced for the College Club for Friday afternoon. It is "New Houses for Old," and the speaker is John Ihlder, executive director of the Pittsburgh Housing Association, an organization the purpose of which is to make every dwelling in Pittsburgh a fit place in which to live. Before coming to Pittsburgh Mr. Ihlder was manager of the civic development department of the United States Chamber of Commerce.

The regular monthly meeting of the music department will be held tomorrow at 2 o'clock in the home of Mrs. A. L. Schiel. Mrs. H. C. Breidert will review chapter two of "Epochs in Musical Progress" and Mrs. E. Boyd Birch, in charge of the musical program, will present Elsie Breese Mitchell in several groups of solos.

Dr. Jamison Will Speak At Y.W.C.A.

DR. AULEENE MARLEY JAMISON, nationally known psychiatrist, will speak on "Habit Versus Personality" in the first of her two lectures at Central Branch Young Women's Christian Association, Tuesday evening at 8:25 o'clock. Dr. Jamison, who is a graduate of the University of Pittsburgh, has had a wide experience in many interesting places. In 1919, following her graduation, Dr. Jamison was called by the national board of the Y. W. C. A. to help in establishing a health center in New York City and to travel about the country conducting health week programs. Shortly after the beginning of her work, however, Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell appealed to the Y. W. C. A. for aid in his work in Labrador. Using funds that had been set aside for war work, the Y. W. C. A. sent Dr. Jamison to Lilley's Island, Newfoundland, where she supervised the work in Dr. Grenfell's hospital. With her went Mrs. Howard Graham, of Pittsburgh, a social worker, and for six months the two women managed the hospital and social center. Later Dr. Jamison went to Tennessee, where for four years, under the auspices of the United Presbyterian Church, she carried on medical work in the mountain sections. In 1926 and 1927, as dean of women at Muskingum College, Dr. Jamison continued her study of people and their adjustments to life.

As part of the same course on "Creative Understanding of Life," in which Dr. Jamison's lectures are scheduled, are two lectures by Dr. E. Adelle Streeseman, of New York City, who will come to Pittsburgh on Saturday. Dr. Streeseman will speak at a luncheon on Saturday and a tea on Sunday.

On Tuesday is also the forum supper at 5:50, at which Miss Elizabeth M. Lee will give the first of her talks for the Advent season. In the light of that first Christmas message of "Peace on Earth," Miss Lee will base her discussion on the extent to which this ideal has been realized and will give her first lecture on "How Far on the Road to Christmas Peace?" Registrations will be received till Monday noon.

Christmas Party At Oakmont Club

MRS. O. E. WATKINS, who was leader Tuesday for the Oakmont Woman's Club meeting, entertained the program committee and the guest speaker, Mrs. Penelope Redd Jones, at luncheon in her home before the regular meeting in the Oakmont Library. Mrs. Jones talked most entertainingly on the international art exhibit, illustrating her lecture with copies of the various pictures. The next regular meeting of the club will be the Christmas party in the Tenth street school December 11, when the junior members, families of the club and the Parent - Teachers' Association will be guests. The Rev. E. J. Van Etten will give his illustrated lecture on "Rushing Through Russia," and Frederick G. Rodgers will sing. Donations of canned goods for presentation to the Oakmont District Nursing Association will be made at this meeting.

MADELON'S MIRROR OF FEMININE FANCY

WE HAVE twenty shopping days from now until Christmas. Naturally they're going to be busy days for you, crowded to the brim with exciting tasks and delightful entertainments. I'm hoping these columns will contain bits of information that will be of aid to you during these strenuous days. I'm pledging myself to diligently search for the most lovely things at the best prices and report to you herein the results of my search. I think we have represented in Madelon's Mirror the best shops of their kind in the city, and I know that during the next few weeks I'm going to have lots of interesting things to tell you. I will welcome any letters of inquiry from my readers, and will be only too glad to furnish more intimate and detailed information about the items I mention.

. . . Corrective Exercises

I AM sure there are many who will be interested to know that the Silverhart Health Studio, No. 10, on the shop floor of the Hotel Roosevelt, makes a feature of corrective exercises for curvature of the spine, infantile paralysis, flat feet, round shoulders, and poor posture. Michael Silverhart, a graduate physiotherapist, personally supervises these exercises. The infra-red rays are also sometimes employed. Any one who has a slight physical defect owes it to themselves to go to Silverhart's and have these exercises explained, and they can readily understand why, if persistently followed, they will accomplish much. Time by appointment. Atlantic 1356.

. . . Escaping Winter

JANUARY, with its cold gray skies and biting winds, pneumonia around the corner, and that let-down feeling that always comes after the Christmas holidays. But you don't care—you're going to spend the next sixteen days sailing sapphire seas, seeing coral houses slumbering white and dazzling against green cliffs, dancing at night to the music of a peppy orchestra. Fairyland, you ask? No, a West Indies cruise on the S. S. Republic, $175.00 and up for sixteen days, including shore excursions. Sailings January 10th and 28th; and this year Pennsylvanias don't have to embark from New York—the S. S. Republic noses right up to Philadelphia's doorstep — a mere jump from Pittsburgh. Information about these cruises obtained from Mr. John Miller, in the Travel Department of the Union Savings Bank, in the Frick Bldg.

. . . Period Designs

RECENTLY I stumbled across a sentence in an article that has stayed with me—"The motor car has come into its art heritage." Of course the automobile that came to my mind as best illustrating this point was the Lincoln. Mechanical excellence in a Lincoln is assumed as a matter of course — how could a car that undergoes approximately 30,000 separate tests and inspections be other than perfect! But today beautiful adaptations of the world's greatest art styles are perfected in Lincoln motor cars. The influence of period design, authentically interpreted in the treatment of the exclusive custom bodies used by Lincoln Motor Car Co. is the consummation of refined motor car magnificence. If you would like to see some of the new models, a phone call to Lowe Motor Co., 5124 Liberty Avenue, will bring one around for demonstration.

. . . An Invitation

I AM acting as emissary for Mrs. Grace Martin Cornelius, principal of the Grace Martin Secretarial School, and Miss Julia E. Thomas, assistant principal. As such I extend a blanket invitation to all the alumni of the school to attend a luncheon in the Empire Room of the Fort Pitt Hotel, Thursday, December 5th. Mrs. Maria G. Corriols will tell the students and guests about her trip abroad, featuring Spain, Monte Carlo, and other interesting places. As the luncheon, which is at 12:15, is expected to consume quite some time, the remainder of the afternoon will be spent playing bridge. Mrs. Cornelius hopes as many of the old students who can arrange to attend will do so. If you want to know more about it, call her at the school, 18th floor of the Keenan Bldg.

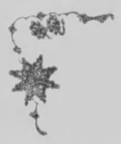
. . . Christmas Flowers

"IF I were King" (a la Walter Winchell) and rich enough, I'd send every friend of mine flowers at Christmas—they are, in my opinion, one of the most charming remembrances. Of course you know where I'd select them—McClements, 535 Wood St. One doesn't need to confine one's gifts from McClements to flowers, however—they are famed throughout Pennsylvania for their 'gorgeous flower and fruit arrangements, and as well one finds glace nuts and fruits, famous candies, brandied fruits—everything to please the eye and palate. If you plan to have McClements help out on your Christmas gifts, give your order early; then there is none of that last-minute rush that is so trying for every one.

. . . Inimitable

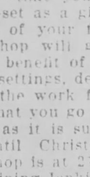
THE stout woman often finds that the stiff, unyielding corsets she has been wearing have broken delicate abdominal muscles, causing ugly rolls of flesh to form. She is in despair about her figure. At this point I wish to step in with my bit. We have in Pittsburgh a wonderful woman who designs foundation garments for such as she. They are of a certain material extremely valuable in distributing the flesh—but it is Mrs. Lasner's own genius in designing that causes them to smooth away and distribute those rolls of flesh as if by magic — that puts Lasner Foundations in a class by themselves. And more wonderful still—after wearing a Lasner Foundation for a few months, those rolls of flesh entirely disappear. Mrs. Lasner's studio is at 615 Clark Building.

. . . Unusual Jewelry



IF YOU are interested in the unusual in jewelry, visit the Little Shop Around the Corner and ask to see their collection of old garnets. Included are necklaces, bracelets, earrings, finger rings, brooches and pins—beautiful glowing dark red stones in antique gold settings. Prices on these rare old pieces are very reasonable, some being as low as $5.95. If you have old jewels—family heirlooms, perhaps—that you wish to have re-set as a gift to some member of your family, the Little Shop will gladly give you the benefit of expert advice on settings, designs, etc., and do the work for you. I advise that you go in at once, though, as it is such a short time until Christmas. The Little Shop is at 217 Stanwix St., adjoining Jenkins Arcade.

. . . Gift Certificates



I DON'T know how many of the men folk read these columns—precious few, perhaps—but the paper might be carelessly left where they can see it, with this item marked. The Graham Hair Shop, 222 Jenkins Arcade, will issue gift certificates redeemable for a Frigidine permanent wave, a course of OGILVIE SISTERS' hair and scalp treatments, or OGILVIE SISTERS' facials. In case you don't know about Frigidine permanents, I'll whisper that Charles of the Ritz gives the Frigidine in his salons throughout the country—and that's that. Of course every one knows of the Ogilvie Sisters, and I assure you the operators at Graham Hair Shop are as competent to give their treatments as the attendants in the New York salons. Atlantic 8392 for appointment.

. . . Monogram'd Crystal

SUCH glittering gorgeousness at Reizenstein's. Do not go into the shop unless you are prepared to come out minus a good part of your pocketbook's contents, though, for you'll not be able to resist. One of the smartest things is crystal with the monogram of the owner—dresser sets, cocktails, wine sets, goblets, cigarette boxes, salad plates—with that "indefinable something" that sets them apart. Reizenstein's know all about these intriguing little things, and their shop leads the procession of monogram engravers. By the way, they have just had made up for their friends the new contract bridge score pads, containing rules. Write, telephone, or call in person for yours. The shop is at 625 Liberty Avenue.

. . . Bargains

HERE'S news, all you bargain hunters! Miss Edwards, of the Edwards Gift Shop, has a table of gifts which were carried over from the summer and fall season, which she is going to sell at a substantial reduction, just to clear them out. Included are candy jars, candlesticks, vases, hand-painted plates, flower bowls, modernistic lamps, and many novelties. Now don't ask me, like the little boy who was offered an apple, what is wrong with them, because there isn't a thing—Miss Edwards just wants to make room for her Christmas stock, and she admits herself that many of the items included are as attractive as her new stock coming in. Edwards Gift Shop is in Room 250, Seventh Avenue Hotel.

. . . Shoe Sensation

THE Parisian Bootery Shops have everything stopped when it comes to shoes. They just received four new models—two at the Wood Street shop, two at the Hotel Roosevelt—that are sensations. As you know, the Wood Street shop is holding a special sale, all shoes $7.70. These new shoes, which were bought to sell at $14.50, will be included. They are of Silkray—a material lovelier than moire—in brown, black and white—an oxford and pump. The shoes at the Hotel Roosevelt shop are of birdseye velvet, in green, brown and blue. They will sell for $9.00. They are all bench-made shoes, handsewn—and you know what that means in shoes. And for $7.70 and $9.00, my dears!

. . . Collegiate Furs

SOON the girls will be coming back from school for the Christmas holidays, and fathers may as well make up their minds pocketbooks will suffer. An absolute essential is a fur coat—she simply can't go back and face the crowd with that old cloth coat. So Mr. J. C. Connolly, the furrier on the third floor, 207 Fifth Avenue, has wisely brought to his showrooms some of the very snappiest and collegiate of fur coats. Only one coat of a kind, prices ranging from $100.00 for a muskrat to $875.00 for a gorgeous black Russian Caracul. Raccoons, Hudson seals (dyed muskrat), squirrels, Jap minks, lapins in honey beige, beaver, and grey. (Lapin is the college girl's favorite fur, next to raccoon). And let me assure you, furs at Connolly's are as sincere and four-square as Mr. Connolly himself.

. . . Clearance Sale

MORE good news from the dress department of Max Azen's fashion salon at the corner of Penn and Seventh. They're having a clearance sale of dresses for $12.85. You've shopped there, and know what lovely things they have, so you'll appreciate what real values are offered when I tell you included are frocks that were formerly priced at $25.00, $22.50, $19.50 and $16.50. The new silhouette is represented; all the new shades such as dahlia, lipstick red, bottle green, mauve, new blue, and black. Fluttery chiffons and soft crepes for afternoon, tailored heavy crepes and light woolens for office wear and sports. At present they have a large selection, but I suggest an early visit so as to be sure of finding the one you want.

. . . The Right Start

IF YOU have among your intimate friends one who has trouble with her feet, but refuses to wear what she calls "Comfort" shoes because they're ugly, here is the chance of a lifetime to start her on the right foot path. Present her with a gift certificate redeemable for a pair of Menihan Arch-aid shoes at Ritter & Morrison's. When she goes into the store and sees the smart and lovely styles; when she is fitted by the experts in this store of "Unhurried Service" and experiences the marvelous comfort of the shoes—she'll be converted for life. Menihan Arch-aid shoes are stunning in appearance, and so cunningly constructed that they are as comfortable as soft kid boudoir slippers. You'll find Ritter & Morrison at 501 Liberty Ave.

. . . Gifts for Babies

HERE'S a tip for Grandmothers and Aunts who are scouring the shops for gifts for the little ones in their families. At the Jay Kiddie Shoppe, 3007 Jenkins Arcade, you'll find adorable coat and hat sets for kiddies from six months to three years—lovely soft fluffy Kenwood blanketing, in white and pale pink and blue, some embroidered with tiny rosebuds. Leggings to match, if desired, and they have a carriage robe to complete the ensemble. Kenwood blanket coats are especially desirable for small children; they wash beautifully. Coat and hat sets for older children also, in heavy tweeds, chinchillas, cheviots, and some of those very swagger red and brown leather coats. Prices at Jay Kiddie Shoppe are always moderate, too, and you'll just love shopping there.

. . . Brilliant With Gifts

OF course we associate Gilbert's with fine furniture, but really these days it is difficult to tell just what one thinks when one enters the store at 602 Smithfield, brilliant with gift suggestions of all sorts. Nobody by any one does not forget that here one can find reproductions of fine old furniture—damask sofas, low luxurious chairs upholstered in fine needlepoint tapestry or crewel work, carved chests and cabinets, coffee tables, end tables—and at the same prices asked for ordinary furniture. But such lovely lamps, smoking stands, solid mahogany desks, fine etchings—real art treasures, in fact at such amazing prices! Gilbert's is really enthralling.

. . . To Reduce

I'VE talked on the same subject before—but it is always timely, that of reducing. And it can be accomplished without dangerous dieting, strenuous rolling and exercising. The Pittsburgh Natatorium, on Duquesne Way, has ideal facilities for reducing. Where careful but immediate reduction is desired, the electric cabinet bath, followed by the properly selected rhythmic manipulation by the body culturer bring excellent results; where urgently rapid results are desired, the infra-red rays are brought into play. It is such a pleasant, easy, safe way to reduce that I cannot see why any woman has an excuse for carrying around superfluous flesh. Tuesdays and Thursdays are days for women.

. . . Enthusiastic

M. LICHTI of Maison Frederic is always enthusiastic about something—one never knows what it is going to be, but be assured it will be something that he feels is going to benefit his patrons. He is never so happy as when experimenting and making new discoveries. Just now he is quite interested in all phases of permanent waving. He says that creating a beautiful permanent wave—one that falls in undulations and shining waves, arranged to bring out the best points of one's profile—is as much a satisfaction to him as it is to the artist to paint a lovely picture. Only skilled operators touch the customer's hair at Maison Frederic; always Lichti himself personally supervises the giving of a permanent. Maison Frederic is at 207 5th Avenue.

. . . Home Economics

IF YOU haven't been attending the classes in home economics that are being held each week in Utility Hall in the Philadelphia Building, I insist that you go this week. These courses in interior decoration, meal planning and household management are free, and offer a wealth of ideas for improving one's mode of living. Miss Karen Fladoes, who is the lecturer and director, will be glad to send you a program and leaflets on the courses, if you'll write or call her. This week we'll have "Dinner in 30 Minutes" Monday evening at 7:30; Tuesday, 2:30, "Emergency Parties;" Wednesday, "Accessories and Touches of Personality;" Friday, "Oven Dishes." Miss Fladoes talks over WCAE Tuesdays and Thursdays at 9 A.M.—be sure to listen in. Entrance to Utility Hall from William Penn Way.

All the bad news of the world, the fighting and the cruelty, are more than offset by the meaning that lies in this one picture.

Here you see the old way and the new way, the old laborer and the new scientific worker. You see in one picture men, under the lash, driven to exert the last ounce of THEIR OWN power. You see in the other picture an independent workman, master of his scientific machine, with the greatest of ease, applying to the work of digging the terrific force of science and of steam, doing a work greater than that of the entire army of miserable men with picks and shovels. In this picture there is not only HOPE but CERTAINTY of ultimate civilization.

Ye shall know the TRUTH and the TRUTH shall make you free.

THE greatest of all truth is SCIENTIFIC TRUTH. It solves our problems, brings freedom from slavery and ignorance on this little earth.

Truth is the great source of power, and science is the great source of truth. Every day men increase marvelously their scientific knowledge and the truth and power back of it.

At the close of the last century not twenty-nine years ago, chemists, for instance, believed that they knew nearly all that there was to know about chemistry. Yet during the few short years of this century men have discovered in the field of chemistry infinitely more than all they had learned in all the centuries preceding.

We are just BEGINNING to open the book of KNOWLEDGE, TRUTH and FREEDOM.

To every discouraging feature of human life there is a comforting BUT.

Millions live in horrible ignorance, superstition, hatred, BUT on the shelves of the libraries, in books, there is knowledge that would dispel ignorance, conquer superstition, and teach that hatred is animal stupidity.

Slowly but surely that knowledge spreads from the libraries to a few minds, and from the few to many. Ultimately it will spread all over the world.

Scattered over this earth are dreadful plague spots—deserts that ruin climates, breed disease, and with their sandstorms invade and destroy adjoining fertile lands.

BUT the great oceans, lakes and rivers have plenty of water for all those deserts. Men have the knowledge and power to take the water to the deserts as soon as they choose to do so.

The energy, skill and money that they waste in murdering each other and conquering each other will one day be devoted to conquering the deserts and beautifying the earth. Those deserts will disappear from the earth. Superstition and ignorance will disappear from the minds of men.

All over this earth are scattered swamps that breed disease of every kind and breed the pests that carry disease. Such swamps crowd up to our greatest cities, constantly sending forth malaria that poisons and makes useless millions of human beings.

BUT men can end those swamps when and as they choose.

A small part of the money that was spent dishonestly, graftingly and stupidly in the last war would have done away WITH EVERY SWAMP AND DESERT IN THE UNITED STATES.

The money that was spent to kill a few millions of human beings would have irrigated the deserts, drained and ended the swamps for all time. It would have wiped out plagues, put an end to malaria and yellow fever. It would have built roads and railroads. It would have reclaimed hundreds of millions of acres to fertility, and supplied the machinery to cultivate them.

But instead men preferred to squander two hundred and fifty thousand millions of dollars on war, to lose on the battlefield ten millions of lives that might have been useful and ten millions more by Spanish influenza, born of the war.

But it will not always be so. Men will not always be savages, stupidly content to endure the evils that Nature inflicts, unwilling to spend the money, small in comparison, to end those evils, but always ready to pour out gold and blood for fighting.

There is HOPE in this picture, for it proves that human beings actually DO go forward.

And once you give a man or a race HOPE the rest is easy. With HOPE men work and dare anything.

Men save and struggle because they see HOPE ahead. Men sacrifice their lives and liberty because they see HOPE of victory for a good cause.

In this picture of men working under the lash, on one side, and of the educated mechanic using science and the power of steam, on the other, you see the HOPE and the CERTAINTY of ultimate civilization on this earth.

The picture on the left shows how work was done in the old days. A hundred thousand men were used to build the Pyramids. And the work took long, dreary years. Generations of slaves were born and died as the work went on. Machinery and a few mechanics would build those Pyramids today between the harvesting of two crops.

A cheap tractor would pull the huge stone that a thousand or five thousand men painfully pushed along on rollers. Air power would smooth off the rocks. Dynamite would do in a second the work that would keep a thousand men under the lash painfully slaving for a year.

The STEAM SHOVEL at work means ten thousand men relieved from the slavery of the shovel.

The full development of machinery will mean ALL MEN FREED FROM PHYSICAL SLAVERY.

It will mean leisure for all and profit for all, and long hours of dull slavery for NONE.

Just as surely as you look at this picture, the old way at the left and the right way at the right, just so surely will the day come on this earth when intelligence, benevolence, education and science will rule everywhere, even INSIDE THE BRAINS OF MEN now dominated by brutality and hatred.

Keep HOPE before your eyes. BELIEVING that things will get better makes it easier for us to help MAKE THEM BETTER. The woman at her needle, with her eyesight failing in the dim light of a candle, has been replaced by the operator of the electric sewing machine. One operator does the work of a hundred women. And that machine gives work at better wages to more human beings than the needle employed.

The slave in the tropics, standing all through the night, slowly moving a fan to cool his sleeping master, is replaced by the noiseless electric fan that costs a few cents to operate—less than the cost of feeding the meanest slave.

And the slave and his master can both sleep.

Sedan chairs once hurried through the streets of Paris, two or four men carrying the chair with aching backs, to wait outside while the fine lady or gentleman enjoyed himself within.

The type of man that used to carry the sedan chair is now home with his family. A gas engine is doing that work. And the man controlling the gas engine is paid what would once have been a fair income for a little nobleman. And he, the chauffeur, is independent.

Once traveling through a country you would pass ten jails, but not one public school or public library. Now the big building that strikes your eye is the new high school or the public library. The jails are still there, but you do not see them. The schools and libraries outnumber them a hundred to one.

Is there not hope in THAT?

Only a few years ago in London, when your grandfather was alive, perhaps, they hanged children for stealing a trifle worth four shillings. And they punished a man brutally because, to save a child's life, he lied about the value of the object that child had stolen from him.

Today all England is horrified at the hanging of a woman, although she was guilty of murder. That is the same England that once laughed and clapped its hands when miserable old women were burned as witches, or when men guilty of no crime except their religious belief were tortured and burned in public.

There is hope and progsess in THAT.

Keep your mind on the GOOD side of life while you fight the bad side.

Realize that our civilization is YOUNG and the earth upon which we live is OLD.

Men have been on the earth, slowly but constantly getting better, for at least 375,000 years. For the Heidelberg man, so-called, lived at least 375,000 years ago.

Think of our progress. Only 12,000 years ago men were in the late Stone Age, when "civilization" consisted in ability to fashion daintily flints used as tools and weapons.

We have millions of years ahead of us on the earth. Science proves it. We have made progress inconceivably rapid during the twelve thousand years that have passed since the Stone Age.

We have made progress altogether beyond the possibilities of belief within two hundred years.

In those two hundred years we have passed from the stage coach to the flying machine, from the torture of witnesses, even innocent witnesses, to the abolition of capital punishment in many civilized states and nations.

We have passed from general ignorance, accepted by all as natural and necessary, to the public school and laws that forbid bringing up children in ignorance.

We are still savages, and brutal, hundreds of millions of us. But HOPE is with us and WILL NOT DISAPPOINT US.

"IT HATH NOT YET BEEN SHOWN WHAT WE SHALL BE."

Now don't get frightened about that "lesson of life." This is to be no abstruse concoction of symbolism and deep-seated meanings that evade the ordinary person, although lauded by the highbrows as "significant" drama. There is nothing like that in "The Leper." It is a play, not a treatise. [illegible] suggests a [illegible] is ethical rather [illegible] logic. Is Dateless, Ageless

It is not a new play, but it is one new to the present era and it is of the firmiture type of drama that is dateless and ageless, as pertinent today as when it was written, since the principal motivating thought is presented in situations that are as modern as the latest gown. And in dialogue—well, let's read the testimonials from the first-production:

"In brilliant epigrams Mr. Seibel's well known wit flashes here and there like a scimitar half out of its scabbard."—Pittsburgh Gazette Times.

"Exceptionally good dialogue—characters drawn in a bold and firm style—Dramatics excellent.—Pittsburgh Post.

"An overwhelming success, it created a sensation."—Pittsburgh Index.

"It has produced a furore."—Pittsburgh Leader.

Newsreel Theater Jumps Into Quick Popularity

By BLAND JOHANESON

NEW YORK, Nov. 30.

AN "I-thought-of-it-first" contest, centering around the new newsreel theater, has become the most popular indoor game of the town. Since the little Embassy Theater has been packing in the customers, standees 10 deep for every performance, everyone is trying to claim the distinction of having suggested years ago that what Broadway needed was an all-newsreels theater. Even the sour boys who predicted it would flop have jumped on the bandwagon and announced they were only fooling.

The Embassy has become the great drop-in spot of the street. Even the women, meeting for the matinees, have turned from the hotel lounges and make their dates to meet in the newsreel theater, where they can be entertained during a 20-minute wait for their breathless, traffic-tied playmates.

Enter G. Bernard Shaw With a Modern Version Of an Old Greek Myth

By GEORGE SEIBEL

LEMPRIERE, the "Who's who" of mythology, tells us that Pygmalion was a sculptor of Cyprus who became a woman hater. He saw all the girls of the island mooning and smoking cigarets and reading Elinor Glyn. So he decided he would never marry. Let Lempriere tell the rest of his story:

"He became enamored of a beautiful statue of marble which he had made, and at his earnest request and prayer, according to the mythologists, the Goddess of Beauty changed the favorite statue into a woman, whom the artist married."

When W. S. Gilbert, long before he wrote "Pinafore" and "The Mikado," wrote the play of "Pygmalion and Galatea," he moved Pygmalion's studio to Athens, but stuck to the classic myth. The Kendals played that poetic drama when Mrs. Kendal was still Madge Robertson.

Bernard Shaw's "Pygmalion," which the Theater Guild brings to the Nixon Theater this week, has nothing to do with Lempriere or mythology. But it's a modern version of the old tale. It's the most humorous of Shaw's plays, except "You Never Can Tell," but he has a lesson tucked away even in this skit.

Shaw says he wrote "Pygmalion" in order to teach the British people the importance of phonetics.

That Shavian Professor

So Shaw's hero is a professor of phonetics. Henry Higgins is his unromantic name.

The public has been accustomed to think of a professor as somebody who teaches the banjo, or performs card tricks, or leaves his umbrella standing in all sorts of places. And what is "Phonetics?" Why should anybody bother about the difference between the two sounds of "th," or labials and sibilants and such?

Shaw in his preface to the comedy tells the English people that they do not know how to talk. They spell their language so abominably that no man can teach himself what it sounds like. But they could be taught. To prove this Shaw lets his "Pygmalion," Prof. Henry Higgins, take his "Galatea," Liza Doolittle, a dirty but respectable flower girl, and lets him teach her the accents of a Duchess.

It's lots of fun. But Shaw can't avoid his propensity to poke satire at middle-class morality. Doolittle is very willing to sell his daughter for fifty pounds, and when he is rebuked for this he replies that morals are too expensive for him to bother with.

When the play was first produced in London, the role of Higgins was taken by Beerbohm Tree and Liza was played by Mrs. Patrick Campbell. When it was first produced in Pittsburgh, Mrs. Patrick Campbell played Liza, but Higgins was interpreted by Philip Merivale.

These people were all of them players of the first rank, but hardly the right types. The cast provided by the Theater Guild ought to pro-

STEPIN FETCHIT admits he's good, modestly, of course, but says Stepin in a letter to me: "Just a line to let you know I appreciate the nice opinion you seem to possess of myself and assuring you that I will try to prove worthy of the nice things that's thought of me in the picture industry. . . . Mr. Cummings, the director of the last picture I played in, 'Cameo Kirby,' didn't believe in someone yawning in a picture because it made people feel lazy. And he forgot to remember that the lazier I made people feel the more I was nearing perfection in my line. So the result was I had to sacrifice a little of my art on account of a pet idea of his and for peace sake."

DOROTHY MACKAILL and Sidney Blackmer in "The Love Racket," new photoplay feature on the screen of the Enright.

All this is apropos of Stepin's announcement that the Fox Company has taken up the option on his contract. Stepin may have the right idea about his art, but it would hardly be desirable, no matter how much realism is needed, to start an audience yawning. Anyone who has seen Stepin yawn knows how infectious a yawn can be.

THEY are telling a story about Ina Claire which shows her as a good sport. Jack Gilbert, like many others, suffered a little in the recent stock crash. He called up his new wife to tell her the bad news. "I have lost money," he said, "a lot of money." "Don't mind, darling," said Ina, "there is nothing to worry about if it's only money you have lost."

I HATE to tell one of our most ardent readers that Nils Asther told me he is going to marry Vivian Duncan. It will break her heart. This unknown correspondent has been hoping and praying that the marriage would never take place. She frankly admits she is in love with Mr. Asther, although she has never met him, and her heart has been heavy ever since she read of this engagement. She hoped it was just another movie romance. But when I met Mr. Asther at Palm Springs he told me he was still engaged. Miss Duncan was not with him at the time.

WHEN Dorothy Dalton arrived in Hollywood to join her husband, Arthur Hammerstein, she said she was glad to be in Hollywood because all of her friends were here now. That is true. The Ambassador Hotel, on Tuesday night, and the Roosevelt Hotel, on Monday night, look like the smart New York night clubs. The stage folk who find it hard to change their hours too suddenly, may be seen at either one of these places. Soon they will find if they want to get up at the crack of dawn and be on the set, they will have to do what all the Hollywood folk do when they are working, get to bed early. No one plays harder than the film folk, and no one is seen oftener at the Roosevelt Hotel and Ambassador, but only when they are not making pictures.

CARL LAEMMLE, SR., isn't going to have any namby-pamby boys sitting around the set smoking between scenes during the filming of "All Quiet on the Western Front." His young men are getting a touch of real German military training for this stark picture of the war and a touch of atmosphere of the trenches. Every day William Janney, Lew Ayres, Walter Brown Rogers and Russell Gleason drill hours in the hot sun, march over country roads and otherwise endure the rigors of army life.

POLLY MORAN has always admitted that William Haines is her favorite actor, and Bill has returned the compliment by putting Polly in the class with Yvette Guilbert and other great actresses. More than that, Polly has said if she were not reported engaged to marry Rogers Davis she might admit that Bill is her secret sorrow. Anyway, Polly is going to play the role of a servant girl in "Fresh From College," Bill's next picture, and a part has been especially written for her.

THERE is just no getting along with Eddie Brandstatter since he plays himself in "The Show Girl of Hollywood" in the Montmartre. The Montmartre figures largely in the life of "The Show Girl" in the story of J. P. McEvoy, you will remember if you read the book or saw the play. It is the place where the girl meets all the film celebrities, and First National has put in the tables, chairs, telephones, musicians, front desk and everything, featuring Eddie Brandstatter as mine host. Some say Eddie looks so much like Adolph Zukor they hope he won't be mistaken for the film magnate. Eddie hopes so, too, for he wants all the publicity as himself he can get.

Stage Ghosts Hop Ban in Recent Plays

By GILBERT W. GABRIEL

Universal Service Dramatic Critic.

NEW YORK, Nov. 30.

EVERY now and then a ghost gets into some new play. That is against all Broadway traditions, because ghosts are considered unpopular and uncomfortable liabilities among most of the local dramatic personae. Our audiences would far rather raise the roof for 40 Albertina Rasch girls than smell one ghost. The only sepulchral old spirit who is on our theatrical door-list is the ghost of Hamlet's father — and he, poor old chap, is usually reduced to a discreetly wavering blotch of light in the art productions of today.

Ghost plays, plays occult, plays of the great beyond, fantasies of the dead alive, have to fight all sorts of prejudices hereabout. Our mystery melodramas often make much ado about white-sheeted, radium-eyed creatures who crawl out of walls and wiggle down staircases in moments of dense black-outs, but the authors of such stock stuff are always canny enough to explain in the end.

Merely Disguises

The ghosts are always flesh-and-blood villains, avengers, dope-peddlers or such, done up in impromptu masquerade with the nearest bed-clothes or bath-towels. Nobody likes to leave a ghost a ghost.

Of course there was "Outward Bound," which everybody loved, and there was Barrie's "Marie-Rose," which everybody might have, should have, loved if it had not been so soggy with the tears of its interpreters. And recently in the Forty-ninth Street Theater, there was "Thunder in the Air." These are this generation's great—if great—exceptions to the anti-ghost rule.

One can understand why Barrie hailed "Thunder in the Air" so highly. It is the sort of play that that dear gentleman might have given his left eye or his favorite briar pipe to write. The idea of it is beautiful indeed. The execution is properly sentimental, just as tenderly but inexorably bitter as Barrie has often

Snow-White Gish Crosses Rubicon And Makes Talkie

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS

Universal Service Motion Picture Editor

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 30.

THE talkies have saved motion pictures from a terrible and ignominious death, Lillian Gish believes. She is confident that the sound inventions arrived just in time to keep the movies from being swept into oblivion and the star along with them.

"I had made all the faces I knew how," said Lillian, "and I felt that I was through as a motion picture actress. I didn't dare attempt anything but the one type of character because everything depended upon my facial expressions. How could I be sure a play of a different nature would suit me?"

"The talkies," said Miss Gish, "make your face much less important because your voice controls the situation."

Lillian, having crossed the rubicon and made her first talkie, is now willing to attempt something different. Mary Pickford has been urging her for a long time to go to the other extreme, anything to get away from the typical Gish characterizations.

And, strange as it may seem, Lillian is about convinced that Mary's advice is good. It wouldn't surprise me to see our snow-white Gish take on all the screen sins of Greta Garbo even to playing a woman of the streets.

Camera Makes You Pretty

In the opinion of Miss Gish the ear is suffering in the talkies now just as the eye did in the old days. "We gradually became accustomed to the moving picture and later they were much steadier and I believe our ears will soon grow accustomed to the sound because the sound machines are becoming more and more perfected."

"Don't you think beauty is as important in the talkies as in silent pictures?" I asked her, after her comment on facial expression.

"Beauty is always important," she said, "but today you can be a perfect fright and the camera man will make you look lovely. Why, this Karl Struss photographer on 'The Swan' could even make Coolidge an Adonis. And you ought to see me," she said. "Honestly, I look much prettier than I am in real life."

Just before Miss Gish started "The Swan" the Russian government wanted her to make a picture there, and she was strongly tempted, but she felt she wasn't robust enough to undergo the difficulties of another foreign production. But later she hopes to make pictures abroad. "I finish my contract with

SLAVE DRIVER

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS and Mary Pickford in "The Taming of the Shrew," in which Doug is the tamer and Miss Pickford the tamed. The talk film of the classic comedy is the photoplay feature in the Penn for the week beginning Monday.

Mary and Douglas Unite and Tame 'Shrew' in Film

By MILDRED FILLMORE

MARY PICKFORD and Douglas Fairbanks have kept their promise. For several years they have, from time to time, announced their intention of appearing together in the same film. Now they have gone and done it. And in the doing they have sought the aid of the late Mr. Shakespeare—putting his "The Taming of the Shrew" into 6,116 feet of film as their co-starring photoplay. Naturally, it's an all-talkie.

With the completion of "The Taming of the Shrew," many rumors involving Mary and Douglas have been in the air. There was talk of both stars being dissatisfied with the production. And the gossips even went further. There were hints of an iceberg or something on their matrimonial sea. Which, you admit, is quite a shocking thought. The idea that the film that brings them together on the screen for the first time should be the means of really separating them—ugh, it is quite sad. And, as it turned out, quite absurd. It now appears that all the rumors, reports and gossip were without foundation. Dispatches come with the news that all is peace and happiness where Mr. and Mrs. Fairbanks are concerned. Now on an overseas tour, they are going to visit the Orient and then return home. And maybe, so the news items have it, they will make another picture together.

Sam Taylor Directs

Sam Taylor directed Mary and Douglas in "The Taming of the Shrew," which, by the by, comes to the Penn Monday. And though the action is laid in a Fifteenth century atmosphere, the film, so we are informed, sparkles with Twentieth century laughs.

Conrad Nagel, one of the busiest talkers on the screen, and one of the most talked-about men in the talkies, who we just have seen under the La Garbo influence, is now in the Stanley in a new all-talkie, "The Sacred Flame." It is based on the W. Somerset Maugham play and it looks like some hectic dramatics and romantics. The theme is that of a young woman torn between pity for her chair-ridden husband and her love for a physically-perfect younger brother. Which is quite a situation, even for a movie. Mr. Nagel plays the fellow who sits in the chair all day. Lila Lee has the role of the wife. And Walter Byron is the handsome lad who completes the triangle. The cast also includes Pauline Frederick, William Courtenay and Dale Fuller.

Will Rogers Talks

Will Rogers, cowboy humorist, who a year or so ago was seen on the screen in "A Texas Steer," again has tried the films—this time in an all-talkie titled "They Had to See Paris." The production, an adaptation of Homer Croy's novel, is the Aldine booking. The plot deals with the experiences in Paris of an Oklahoma family that has become suddenly rich as the result of an oil gusher. Supporting Cowboy Rogers in the production are Irene Rich, Marguerite Churchill and Owen Davis, Jr.

"The Love Racket," starring Dorothy Mackaill, is the current feature in the Enright. It is a talkie and it has Miss Mackaill as the sweet-

Lloyd Talks About Dogs

By JIM MITCHELL,

(Universal Service)

LOS ANGELES Nov. 30.

IT'S no good, folks. Interviewing this man Lloyd. F'instance you say:

"Now, Harold, since you have made your first talking picture, what do you think of them?"

And he comes right back at you with an opinion, so authoritative and so startling that it is what you might call well, startling.

He says:

"I'm going to have some Great Danes at the Ambassador show that will make your eyes stick out a foot."

And, then you say:

"Do you think returns from silent pictures can justify their continued production?"

And, he says:

Dogs Versus Films

"I thought I had a lot of Danes, but when I was back East I went down to Philadelphia and found a man who had 40 more than I have."

You say:

"Do you think sound or dialogue could possibly cram any more laughs into a picture than you had in "Safety Last," or "Grandma's Boy?"

And, he says:

"You remember Ilio and Zampa and Prince? Well I have moved them with three others of my best ones over to the house."

Then, you say:

"Do you plan to make your next picture in French, German and Spanish for the foreign market, as well as in English?"

And he says:

"I've got some Great St. Bernards, too."

Then you say:

"I raise wire-haired terriers."

"You do! Why, I've got a wire, too. The boys gave him to me Christmas three years ago. We called him Speedy for the picture we were making then."

It's no good, folks, this interviewing Harold Lloyd.

Orchestra Week Brings Two Bands in Concerts

By J. FRED LISSFELT

THIS is orchestra week. After watching the attendance at our own orchestra concerts and at those of visiting orchestras, and seeing the sparser numbers at such performances as given by the Boston Symphony, we wonder whether Pittsburgh wants symphonic music or a place to go of a Sunday evening. Our taste is indeed in question.

The Pittsburgh Orchestra offers this Sunday night the most ambitious program of its career, for each work demands superior players. Long ago the best taste barred singers from symphony programs, and many of us have certainly been convinced that it is justifiable. But we must welcome Florence Austral as a real missionary.

Slice From Opera

Too rarely do we have "grand" opera and the opportunity to hear the great musical scenes from Weber, Wagner or Strauss. We have long and fervently wished for a singer who could sing us a large slice from one of their operas, especially from Wagner. Both airs to be sung by Miss Austral demand that a singer be at the pinnacle in her art. "Agathe's" prayer and aria from Weber's "Freischuetz" requires the knowledge of every technical and musical trick; "Brunnhilde's Immolation" scene from the "Dusk of the Gods" goes further and demands genius.

It comes at the symphonic and dramatic climax of an overpowering trilogy of operas, where the music is crowded with every foregoing motif and and the drama is devastating. The orchestra can play this scene alone as a tone poem; with the addition of a heroic voice it becomes music that one can never forget.

Novelty by Rivier

The Cleveland Orchestra will play a novelty of Jean Rivier—an "Overture to a Don Quixote"—and a revival of the "Carnaval de Parnasse," by de Mondonville, a master of music to Louis XV. Mr. Sokoloff sees to it that his men get in on the ground floor and is always zealous for new music, new enough for a reasonable public. The additional attraction of having Josef Hofmann as piano soloist in two brilliant concertos adds considerably to the interest in this pair of concerts for Friday and Saturday.

Pittsburgh talent is to be on the boards again Monday, when the Pittsburgh Opera Company plays the double bill of "Pagliacci" and "Cavalleria Rusticana." The same evening the local pianist, Norman Frauenheim, gives another recital in the auditorium of the Young Men and Women's Hebrew Association.

This talented fellow is a disciple of the modern French school and always has a few stunning novelties to sandwich

Graves' Swell-Head Cure Expensive

By KENNETH R. PORTER

Universal Service

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 30.

YOUTH, if successful, is very susceptible to what is commonly known as the swell head.

It is difficult to find hats large enough. It is still more difficult to find anyone brainy enough to stop the swelling. The victim may have been quite likeable before the inflation, too.

Such was the case with Ralph Graves.

As the studious son of a structural engineer in Cleveland, he was considered a nice kid. Graduating from the Case School of Applied Sciences, he seemed destined to become a metallurgist. But young Ralph had other plans, for, at the old Essanay Studios, in Chicago, he had glimpsed such stars as Charles Chaplin, Gloria Swanson and Wallace Beery. The lure of a more glamorous career gripped him.

Ralph Graves

Swift Progress

"It's funny what gives a fellow the swelled head," he began, with a little wry smile which contrasts severely with his usual infectious one. "It's still funner the way he loses it. I progressed rather rapidly in my chosen profession. Too fast, I guess, for after a comparatively short time and with seemingly little effort, I was making $1,000 a week. Lots of dough for a kid in his early 20's. "Big money has a tendency to take a youngster's feet off the ground. When this happens it's time to stop and check up. But I didn't. Day by day in every way I was getting better and bigger—in the head. I wouldn't listen to directors and started working on technique. I became a great technician—to myself. I was 'hard-to-get-along-with,' so decided to make a picture my way.

The World's Worst

"I found a party with confidence and money enough to finance the venture and, with $65,000, I visualized a masterpiece in cinematic perfection. I wrote, directed and acted in the picture. When I saw the finished product the swelling went down and the film was never released. It was the most terrible thing I ever saw, but truly a Ralph Graves production."

Ralph realized that a small amount of folly can undo a great deal of hard work. Being a "smart guy" on and off the screen didn't pay, and he went into temporary retirement. After a good airing he returned to write, direct and act in pictures for various organizations. He has appeared in three successful talkies and is now under a five-year contract to Columbia pictures. His most recent film is "The Song of Love."

Good Boy Now

"I'm a good boy now," continued Ralph with a broad grin. "I listen to criticism, and my chief aim is to give the pub-

Nathan Milstein Y.M.-W.H.A. Artist

NATHAN MILSTEIN, young Russian violinist, will make his first appearance in Pittsburgh with the Y. M. and W. H. A. Musical Society on December 8. He recently made his North American debut in Toronto. Although Milstein is little known in America, he has played in Europe for many years.

duce a better ensemble.

Shaw has shown his usual vein by making the action of the comedy hinge upon the fatal word which finishes his experiment to stop.

To tell that fatal word would be giving away the plot of the play.

When Higgins has educated his flower-girl sufficiently to pass her off as a Duchess some extremely diverting situations arise. And everything gets into such a mess that Shaw had to write a Sequel to dispose of his characters and explain what he really meant.

That Sequel is not played this been in his fantasies.

But it is from Maeterlinck if from any elder, that "Thunder in the Air" plucks its theme. From "The Blue Bird" from that scene wherein the old dead grandparents explain that they come to life again only when people think of them. That our only immortality is in the memory of those we've left behind.

The ghost of "Thunder in the Air" is a soldier long since slain and unburied, scion of a British gentry, a cashiered officer who has anyhow died heroically and left reminders of his living days in the hearts of several lonely ladies and jealous men. To each of these he returns in the guise of how they remember him; hatefully to his martinet of a father, a white and shining lover to his ex-fiancee—he lies in her hungry arms as in some modern "Pieta"—and to his old mother as a little boy, mischievous, elusive, hugging a toy trumphet. Scoff not, he'll have you crying a bit.

But most often your emotion would have been three-quarters exasperation. Not with the play, but with the players. There ought to be some legal way of confining bad actors to bad plays.

Bevy of Ghosts

On the other hand, "Berkeley Square" is so beautifully done, so gracefully and ever tidily performed, it could be the worst balderdash and still seem like very good Balderston. And "Berkeley Square" is inhabited by a whole congress of ghosts. It transplants its present day and prosy little hero all the way back into the great-grandfather's era, so that he lives and moves and romances among many long dead ancestors.

There's nothing cheaply spooky to it, though. The thrill that skeins the story of "Berkeley Square"—thanks originally to Henry James—is two-fold. Finely of feelings too exquisite to be called simply terror. The unbelievableness of it has a kindly shine. Its ghosts are not Halloween goblins; there's not one pumpkin-head among them. They are wistful, pastel, evanescent—and yet forever alive. They are the comedy of the occult at the best you've ever seen or dreamed it.

Charles King On Penn Stage

THE feature attraction in the Penn, beginning Monday, will be the personal appearance of the stage and screen star, Charles King. He will sing a medley of popular theme songs. Nat Nazarro, Jr., and his Aristocrats of Jazz will present "The Song Shop." Featured entertainers will include Hal Sherman, Carleton and Bellein, Maureen and Sonny, Faust Trio, Gladys St. John, Harold Hanson and Aramid Sjovik, bass singer, and a group of Dave Gould Girls. The screen will offer the first co-starring vehicle of Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, a talkie version of "The Taming of the Shrew." Dick Leibert, organist, and Elias Breeskin and the Penn Orchestra will be on the bill.

Talk Equipment In Cameraphone

THE Harris Amusement Company, which operates the Cameraphone, has installed a Western Electric Vitaphone talking picture equipment, and beginning Monday, December 9, will present a new policy of entertainment at that house. On that day the theater will open with the Vitaphone equipment, presenting, as its first attraction, "The Cockeyed World."

'Pirate Capers' Show in Enright

JAY MILLS is presenting "Pirate Capers" as the new stage show in the Enright. Mills does a soft shoe dance and sings a song. The girls have a novelty arranged for the production number. "Moanin' Low" has been chosen as the band number, with a special arrangement by Jerry Mayhall. Milton Slosser, guest organist, offers a novelty organlogue.

One Reeler For Cantor

EDDIE CANTOR, who is featured in the Florenz Ziegfeld screen production, "Glorifying the American Girl," with Mary Eaton, Helen Morgan and Rudy Vallee, recently completed a new one-reel comedy for Paramount. His new vehicle was written by himself, and deals with his troubles ensuing from infraction of the motor speed laws. Cantor, who is now starring on Broadway in the stage success, "Whoopee," made the picture at Paramount's Long Island studio.

Lon Chaney As Trader

HERE'S how to get something out of nothing. Lon Chaney wandered onto the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer lot the other day and someone gave him two fight tickets. He traded them for a camera tripod and then traded that for a lens for his amateur movie camera. This he later traded for a graflex camera—and then traded that for a fine setter dog which he's keeping for his dove-hunting expeditions.

'Sunkissed' For Banky

THE completed cast of "Sunkissed," Vilma Banky's new starring film, includes Edward G. Robinson, Robert Ames, Lloyd Ingraham, Richard Carle and Anderson Lawler. Victor Seastrom is directing.

CHARLES KING, stage and screen actor, is to be seen in person in the Penn.

Pittsburgh Opera On December 16

THE Pittsburgh Grand Opera Company will present its fourth performance, a double bill including Mascagni's "Cavelleria Rusticana" and Leoncavalle's "Pagliacci," in Syria Mosque, December 16, instead of December 2, as previously announced.

Negro Baritone To Sing Tuesday

PAUL ROBESON, Negro baritone, will give a concert in Carnegie Music Hall Tuesday evening. Lawrence Brown will be accompanist. Justin Sandridge, young Negro pianist, also will contribute to the program.

Nils Asther Has New Dog

NILS ASTHER, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's Swedish film player, whose fad is playing with animals in a Los Angeles zoo, has a new pet. It is a dog that boasts nine-tenths wolf blood and looks exactly like a timber wolf. Strange to say the animal, which rejoices in the name "Stupid," is exceedingly gentle despite his dangerous appearance.

'Pygmalion,' Guild Drama in Nixon

"PYGMALION," one of George Bernard Shaw's better-known dramas, will be presented in the Nixon Theater by the Theater Guild Acting Company for a week, beginning Monday. It is the fourth production of the guild's second Pittsburgh subscription season. It was written for Mrs. Pat Campbell and presented with great success by that actress in both London and New York more than 15 years ago. "Pygmalion," as its title might indicate, takes the old fable of Pygmalion, the sculptor, and Galatea, the marble image who came to life, and transposes it to the present day, where a master of proper speech attempts to transform a cockney flower-girl into a grand lady. He is, it seems, somewhat successful, but the lady's one lapse from her high teaching and her use of a word still looked down upon by the English was sufficient at the time of the play's original production to cause a great rumpus in London and it still serves, in a day accustomed to forthright phrases, to arouse considerable amusement.

Ethel Leginska Here December 10

ETHEL LEGINSKA, woman pianist and conductor, will bring her Boston Women's Symphony Orchestra to Pittsburgh for the fourth May Beegle concert in Syria Mosque on Tuesday evening, December 10. Her Pittsburgh program will include the Liszt Hungarian Fantasy, played and conducted from the piano by Leginska.

Seibel Play Is Offered By George Cast in Pitt Theater

such discussion." — Pittsburgh Sun.

These are comments extracted from reviews of the play when it was originally presented by another company in the Pitt. It was a stock company, too, a new stock company that had been just about holding on for several weeks, its future fate dubious. Then Mr. Seibel's play was taken on for its premiere and proved to be a hit. It ran for two weeks, two performances daily, to packed houses and later had successful engagements in other cities where critics were as outspoken in their praise as those of Pittsburgh had been.

Unusual Triangle

Something has been stated to the effect that the matter of ethics is involved. It may be of interest to know that the first title of the play was "A Case in Ethics." The difficulty in settling upon a proper title is evident. Three central characters in the play are a man who is told he is unfit for marriage, the physician who tells him, and the girl with whom the doctor as well as the other man is in love. The confidential relationship existing between the doctor and his patient restrains him. He would save the girl he loves, but—his obligation to his profession and to his patient!

This conflict between love and duty is predicated upon a decent respect of a doctor for what he learns about persons that others could not and should not learn. And upon what is known as the Hippocratic oath. This oath bound early students of medicine to most circumspect conduct in the practice of its profession. In some colleges a form of it has been in use until recently, and possibly still is. The following survives:

"That whatever I see or hear of in the lives of men which is not fitting to be spoken, I will keep inviolably secret."

The ethical question merely is the foundation of the higher one, the more important one, the right of a child to be well-born. I shun the word "eugenic" purposely. It has a laboratory sound. We all know what well-born means, what it denotes, what it connotes. And we know the significance of health of parents in relation to that of offspring. And that is the "lesson of life" referred to as being visualized in "The Leper."

That he has visualized it well and with brightness and humor will be accepted as a fact by those who know George Seibel. They are aware that fun flows in his veins, and is part of his life, and must be imparted to all that he does. For those who know not the man the testimonials above. There may be "lessons" of life, but with George Seibel they must not be gloomy lessons.

One for Mansfield

Mr. Seibel has written other plays. One he submitted to Richard Mansfield. Rather he took it to him, here in Pittsburgh, for the then younger George was an admirer of the great actor, who was on a more familiar footing than many other admirers, that of friendship. They were often together. Mansfield did not want a one-act play, "but," he said, "I do want a play on this subect of Omar Khayymam. Go ahead and write it."

So it was written, but never produced. Death of the actor intervened before the arrival of what he termed the "psychological moment." Meanwhile there is the Pitt, the George Sharp Players, "The Leper" — and George Seibel.

As for other theaters, there will be stage "presentations" and feature films in the Penn, Stanley and Enright, and vaudeville and pictures in the Harris. The Academy, as usual, offers burlesque.

JOSEF HOFMANN will come to Pittsburgh with the Cleveland Orchestra at concerts in Syria Mosque next Friday night and Saturday afternoon. On Friday night he will play the Beethoven Concerto No. 4, and on Saturday afternoon the Rubinstein Concerto No. 4. A special concert for children will be given by the Cleveland Orchestra in Carnegie Music Hall Friday afternoon.

Films Sign Playwright

WILLIAM ANTHONY MAGUIRE, playwright and author of books of many Ziegfeld musical hits, will write, direct and produce talking pictures for United Artists in Hollywood. He has signed a long term contract with Joseph M. Schenck, president of United Artists, and goes to Hollywood in January. First he must complete the books for "Ming Toy," which Florenz Ziegfeld is bringing to the stage, and for "Ripples," in which Charles Dillingham will present Fred Stone.

"Whoopee," "Kid Boots," "The Three Musketeers" and "Rosalie" are among the Ziegfeld musical hits for which Mr. Maguire wrote the books,—and for which he also staged those books. "Six Cylinder Love" and "Twelve Miles Out" are among his plays. Mr. Maguire has staged everything he has written. "Twelve Miles Out" was filmed with John Gilbert as its star, but this Schenck contract will represent Mr. Maguire's first personal contact with the making of films.

PIANIST

JOSEF HOFMANN, world-famous pianist, will appear as soloist with the Cleveland Orchestra in Syria Mosque next Friday night and Saturday afternoon.

Finds Son On Film Set

IT'S AN ill wind that does not blow someone good! Likewise it is a poor light that doesn't do more than it is called upon to do.

While Melville Brown was directing Olive Borden and Arthur Lake in Radio Pictures' "Dance Hall," he suffered a slight injury to his eye due to lamp brilliance. A newspaper published a "sob" story about Brown directing and using the eyes of his assistant, Tommy Atkins.

A girl and her mother spied the story. Playing a "hunch" she called the RKO Studios and found that Tommy Atkins is their brother and son, who went to war in 1917 and whom they had given up for lost. All three had tried to make their paths converge for 12 years; a little newspaper yarn turned the trick.

Vaudeville Acts, Graff in Harris

VICTOR GRAFF, as master of ceremonies in the Harris, presents a new series of impersonations of famous singers, including Caruso and McCormick. The Keith vaudeville has Eddie Hall and Jack Pillard in a fun act, "It Gets a Guy Sore," and Wilson, Keepel and Betty, a dancing trio, as features. William Mitchell will present an organlogue. Belle Baker is seen and heard on the screen in "Song of Love," offering a drama of backstage life.

heart of a bounder who promises to marry her, but doesn't. The cast includes Sidney Blackmer and Edmund Burns.

Belle Baker, who has made a name for herself in vaudeville, is making her debut as a talking screen actress in the Harris. Her film is titled "The Song of Love." Incidentally, Miss Baker is one of those players you run across from time to time whose real life story is adventurous and as crowded with human interest as any photoplay.

Real Life Drama

Born of Russian refugee parents, who fled from the terrors of Kishinev, Miss Baker landed with a brood of brothers and sisters in the East Side, New York. Followed years of poverty. Eventually she got a chance to appear in a cheap little theater near her home at a salary of $3 a week. Later Jacob Adler, Yiddish actor, heard her sing and she became a member of his company. Next she found herself playing stock in the Irving Place Theater, and finally, after much discouragement, vaudeville called her—and called to the tune of $10 a week. Life began to smile at her then and has been smiling ever since. Now she has risen to a high place in the theatrical world.

In "Song of Love" Miss Baker sings seven numbers during the action of the film, which is heralded as a backstage musical drama. Ralph Graves has a featured role. And, by the way, the production was made by Columbia, the organization that handed out "Submarine" and "Flight."

Two pictures remain for further engagements. One is "Disraeli," starring George Arliss, which is being continued in the Grand. The other is the screen version of Flo Ziegfeld's "Rio Rita," now on a second week in the Sheridan Square.

"The Gold Diggers of Broadway" is to be seen in three theaters—the South Hills, the Mt. Oliver and the Etna. The Cameraphone offers Morton Downey in "All Aboard." The Garden feature is "Sweetie." The William Penn presents "The Unholy Night."

New Talkie By De Mille

ROLAND YOUNG is the first player to be selected for the cast of Cecil B. De Mille's "Madame Satan." "Dynamite" was De Mille's first dialogue production, released by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and "Madame Satan," which is a farce comedy with music, will be his second film under the M-G-M banner. Young, who has been prominent on the New York stage for years, appeared recently in "The Unholy Night" and "Wise Girls" and has just completed an important part in "The Bishop Murder Case."

Sharp Players In 'The Leper'

"THE LEPER," a domestic drama, written by George Seibel, literary editor and dramatic critic of the Sun-Telegraph, will be the production offered by the George Sharp Players for one week, beginning Monday night, in the Pitt. "The Leper" concerns a western mining millionaire, in love with a girl. He is appalled when told by a physician that he is unfit for marriage. The physician also loves the girl, but his professional code of honor will not permit him to reveal what he has learned about his patient, though instincts of humanity and his love for the girl impel trous marriage. Lillian Hammond and Harland Tucker head him to save her from a disas- the cast.

Symphony This Sunday

THE second concert of the Pittsburgh Symphony Society will take place this Sunday evening in Syria Mosque. Eugene Goossens, well known to Pittsburgh, will be guest conductor. Florence Austral, singer of Wagnerian music, will be the soloist. Miss Austral is the leading dramatic soprano of the Covent Garden Opera Company, London.

The program follows: Overture, "The Bartered Bride," Smetana; "Leise, Leise" (Der Freischutz), Weber, vocal solo; Symphony No. 3 ("Eroica"), Allegro con brio, Marcia funebre, Scherzo, Finale, Beethoven; Fountains of Rome, Respighi; "Brunnhilde's Immolation" (Gotterdammerung), Wagner, vocal solo, and Les Preludes, Liszt.

'Frills, Fancies' On Stanley Stage

FEATURED by a picture finale arranged by Al Kaye, the Stanley stage this week presents "Frills and Fancies." Dick Powell, master of ceremonies, directs the performance and sings several songs. The chorus does a parody on "In a Kitchenette." Featured entertainers include Bernice and Emily, acrobatic dancers, "The Sacred Flame," with Conrad Nagel and Lila Lee, is the film feature. David Broudy directs the Stanley orchestra in an overture and Bernie Armstrong is at the organ.

Shakespeare Vies With Modern Dramas on Screen Here

Film Chat By Parsons

United Artists with "The Swan" and then I shall be free to do many things I have wanted to do all my life."

I am convinced one of these will be to follow Mary Pickford's advice and find a play that will picture her as a woman of the world. Mary found the flapper role saved her when the popularity of her Tomboy character was on the wane. Perhaps Lillian will be equally successful in a new characterization. Wonder what her public thinks. Speak up, public, and let us hear your opinion.

Dorothy Dalton Is Coming Back

DOROTHY DALTON, star of Morris Gest's stage spectacle, "Aphrodite," and of many Famous Players and Thomas Ince films, is returning to Hollywood and motion pictures after five years' retirement. She left New York for Los Angeles and will join her husband, Arthur Hammerstein, in California.

"Bride 66," Mr. Hammerstein's first film production, will bring Miss Dalton back to the screen, which she left after her marriage to him April 22, 1924, in Chicago.

December 1, 1919, Miss Dalton made her appearance at the Century Theater in New York, in "Aphrodite." Prior to that stage appearance, and subsequent to it, she appeared in many films, the first of them Thomas Ince's "The Disciple."

In "Moran of the Lady Letty," a Famous Players film released in February of 1922, Miss Dalton appeared with Rudolph Valentino.

Dorothy Mackaill Star in Enright

"THE LOVE RACKET," a talkie starring Dorothy Mackaill, is current in the Enright. Miss Mackaill appears as the sweetheart of a bounder who promises to marry her but doesn't. The cast includes Sidney Blackmer, Edmund Burns, Myrtle Stedman, Edward Davis, Webster Campbell, Clarence Burton and Alice Day. The bill also has a stage show and an organlogue.

SMILES

THE smiling Bernice is a member of the team of Bernice and Emily, featured on the Stanley stage.

Tom Dislikes Corn Beef

TOM MOORE is Irish and proud of it—but he detests corned beef and cabbage. The only time he eats it is when forced to in some picture where he has to dine in an Irish role. "I wish directors could understand that Irishmen eat other things besides corned beef and cabbage—caviar, for instance," is the plaint of the actor, who, with Blanche Sweet, appears in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's new talkie of night life in New York.

Newsreel House Hits

act curtain. It isn't smart to arrive at the theater for the first act.

Broadway's first all newsreel theater has gone over so brilliantly the idea surely will spread to other towns.

The week has been unsensational on Broadway, as preholiday weeks always are. To be sure, Rudy Vallee's "The Vagabond Lover" has invaded the field of $2 specials, only to be soundly whacked by the critics. Poor Rudy. His first-nighters, having been entertained at Rudy's supper club, were too polite to giggle. But what they said about Rudy's acting once they got outside the theater! The lad is certainly a freak attraction. No matter how heartily he gets spanked, the girls still adore him and the advance sale on "The Vagabond Lover" has been terrific.

Interest in "Shrew"

Mary and Doug in "The Taming of the Shrew" come to the Rivoli this week. Fancy the stars can neither make a personal appearance, sing over the radio, nor have their pictures taken being protected by the police. Interest is keen over the picture nevertheless.

Marion Davies, having finished "Dulcy," has arrived in her home town for a short holiday. In a very dignified long skirt, which even the male photographers pronounced "cute," Marion stepped off the same train which brought the Al Jolsons and Sam Goldwyn.

The town will soon be filled with glamorous Hollywood visitors. Lillian Tashman, the movies' best-dressed villainess, is on her way East, as is Louise Fazenda. Lina Basquette is here, negotiating for a Broadway show. Maurice Chevalier has returned to the Paramount studio in Astoria. June Collyer remains in town to make an independent picture.

Prepares for Yule

Fannie Brice will be here this week to reopen her New York house for the holidays.

Mr. David Wark Griffith, the old master himself, has arrived on Broadway to look for a possible Lincoln. The severe standards D. W. has set up for the hero of his first talking "epic" has the local Lincolns rather fretful. People are always coming to New York to look for talent, then going home and giving the role to Laur la Plante!

Business has been bright in the local picture houses, both the weekly change theaters and the $2 specials making a nice customer showing. "The Love Parade" has joined "Disraeli" and "Sunny Side Up" in top rating among the hits.

Louise Fazenda Tries Apache

"LITTLE did I dream that talking pictures would make an Apache dancer out of me," claims Louise Fazenda. "There is no limit to what we girls can do for the sake of a career when we have to."

Louise and Lupino Lane are now rehearsing the dance which made Lane and his brother famous on the stage, for the picture, "Bride of the Regiment," being made at First National. Prior to this, Louise danced an Apache dance in "So This is Paris Green" at the Christie studio.

"I have never done professional dancing," says this versatile actress. "It is remarkable how concentrated efforts will bring out talents one never dreamed of. We silent picture girls have to meet the same demands that are made on stage stars with years of training, and all we can do is to try."

The production is being filmed in technicolor, with Miss Fazenda, Ford Sterling and Lupino Lane furnishing the humor for the Russian story of intrigue and war.

CAPERS

HELENA LOMAS cuts some of the capers in "Pirate Capers," stage revue in the Enright.

M-G-M Signs Old-Timers

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER announces the signing of Weber and Fields, Louis Mann, Josephine Sabel and other noted players whose names will be made public shortly.

All of these stars will appear in a big musical production now in course of preparation, titled "Just Kids." Every player in this production will be a stage celebrity whose fame links the past with the present theatrical generation. The new picture will be along revue lines.

Mary Pickford, Fairbanks in Penn

TWO of the most popular stars in the history of motion pictures are brought together for the first time in "The Taming of the Shrew," which comes to the Penn Monday. They are Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks. Shakespeare's comedy, "The Taming of the Shrew," was meant for laughs and Director Sam Taylor is said to have succeeded in deftly bringing out every iota of that comedy. Miss Pickford has the role of Katherine and the agile Fairbanks is seen as the gay Petruchio. The picture is a talkie. Among the featured players who support the two stars are Joseph Cawthorn, Clyde Cook, Dorothy Jordan, Geoffrey Wardwell and Edwin Maxwell. Charles King, musical comedy star of the "Follies" and "Hit the Deck," who became famous on the screen as the star of "The Broadway Melody," will be the feature attraction on the stage, where he will appear in person and sing a medley of popular theme songs.

'Sacred Flame' Film in Stanley

A GIRL married to one brother, yet loving another brother, is the situation that forms the basis for "The Sacred Flame," all-talking film on the Stanley screen. Conrad Nagel and Lila Lee are cast in the leading roles. On the stage Dick Powell presents "Frills and Fancies." Bernie Armstrong offers "Back Home," a novelty organlogue, and David Broudy directs the Stanley Orchestra in "The Prince of Pilsen," an overture.

Sheridan Square Keeps 'Rio Rita'

R-K-O's picturization of Flo Ziegfeld's "Rio Rita" is remaining in the Sheridan Square for a second week. Bebe Daniels and John Boles have the leading roles and there is a large cast of stage and screen talent in their support. There is a story, involving a Texas ranger's romance with a Mexican senorita which is unraveled in conjuction with elborate singing and dancing episodes. Both Miss Daniels and Mr. Boles are featured in a number of songs. Several sequences are presented in color.

Talkie in Harris Has Belle Baker

BELLE BAKER, vaudeville star, makes her motion picture debut in "Song of Love," the Columbia alltalking and singing backstage drama, current in the Harris. Appearing with Miss Baker in "Song of Love" are Ralph Graves, David Durand and Eunice Quedens. Eric Kenton directed. Miss Baker sings seven songs in the picture. The Fox Movietone News shows the sound and talk pictures made at the recent unique annual dinner of the Variety Club of Pittsburgh.

lic what they want—not what I want. I wish everyone who dislikes anything I do would write and tell me about it. I'd at least try to please them."

Gone is the callow youth of egocentric tendency, and in his place is a man given to constant analysis of plays, books, pictures and life itself. He's a real guy now.

If you don't believe it, write to him and see.

Will Rogers Talks On Aldine Screen

WILL ROGERS' first all-talking picture, the Fox Movietone comedy drama, "They Had To See Paris," comes to the Aldine Monday. It is an adaptation of Homer Croy's novel. The story deals with the experiences in Paris of the Peters family of Oklahoma which, it has become suddenly rich from an oil gusher. Mrs. Peters is ambitious to consort with nobility, and after renting an expensive chateau, stages a reception, to which many titled people are invited, but who demand payment in advance for appearing at the function. Among them is a grand duke, who asks the top price of $1,000. The cast includes Irene Rich, Marguerite Churchill, Owen Davis, Jr., Fifi Dorsay, Ivan Lebedeff and Rex Bell.

Garden Screen Gets 'Sweetie'

"SWEETIE," collegiate musical comedy of the screen, will be offered in the Garden Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. The feature Thursday, Friday and Saturday will be Clara Bow in "The Saturday Night Kid."

Jack Holt Film In Cameraphone

JACK HOLT in "Acquitted," will be the talk feature in the Cameraphone Monday and Tuesday. "All Aboard," with Morton Downey, will be the feature Wednesday and Thursday. Friday and Saturday "In Old Arizona" will be offered.

STEPS

MEET Betty, who is a member of the dance team, Wilson, Keppel and Betty, a vaudeville feature in the Harris.

George Again Brute Man

"LADIES LOVE BRUTES," described as a dramatic portrait of a New York East Side gentleman, has been selected as George Bancroft's next starring vehicle. This all-dialogue film, which will represent Bancroft as a ruthless but romantic leader of men who is forced to face the humble realities of life, is scheduled to go into production Ruth Chatterton, a star in her own right, who recently completed "The Laughing Lady" at the Paramount Long Island studio, will be Bancroft's leading lady.

'Unholy Night' In William Penn

THE William Penn, Monday and Tuesday, will offer "The Unholy Night." "The Girl From Havana" will be presented Wednesday and Thursday. "Fast Company" will be seen Friday and Saturday.

Morris Gets Radio Role

CHESTER MORRIS has won one of the film plums of the year. Weeks of intensive search on the part of Harvard Brown for the right man to play Brown, for the radio musical comedy title role in Radio Pictures' "The Cat of Seraval Grotha," finally ended when Morris was signed for the part.

Neil, Evelyn In Picture

NEIL HAMILTON is now back in Hollywood preparing for his next picture, following his return from a European vacation which he took upon completion of an important supporting role in "Darkened Rooms" Evelyn Brent's first starring picture for Paramount.

Three Theaters Get 'Gold Diggers'

"THE GOLD DIGGERS OF BROADWAY" will be presented in three Harris theaters—the Mt. Oliver, the South Hills and the Etna—on Monday and Tuesday. The cast includes Ann Pennington, Winnie Lightner, Conway Tearle and Nick Lucas.

Orchestra Week Comes

In between the three Bs of classic music on the program Beethoven, Bach and Brahms, will come with Ravel, Mussorgsky and Stravinsky.

The return of Paul Robeson, most important of Negro singers, brings to a musician nearer the heart of his people than any other of our interpreters. Equipped with a training, he lacks none of the finish required for the best artistic results. In Robeson is the voice of the jungle, the roadside and the plantation.

Grand Retains Arliss Picture

THE crowning achievement of one of England's most famous men, Disraeli, forms the basis for the picture named after him, which is the all-talking film in the Grand for a second week. The strategy by which he gained the Suez Canal for England and thus made Queen Victoria the sovereign of India, is the main incident in the story. George Arliss, who portrayed the role so successfully upon the stage, again appears as Disraeli.

BAER FACTS IN HOLLYWOOD by Arthur (Bugs) Baer

Ropin' the News with Will Rogers

Money Still Remains In U. S.

WELL all I know is just what I read in the papers. And I just havent had much time to read the papers lately on account as you know, that I have been trying my best to help Mr. Hoover and Wall Street "Restore Confidence." You take confidence, its one of the hardest things in the World to get restored once it gets out of bounds.

I have helped restore a lot of things in my time, such as cattle back to the home range, Herded Folly Girls toward the stage door near show time.

Helped to revive interest in National Political Conventions. Even assisted the Democrats in every forlorn pilgrimage, and a host of other worthy charities. But I tell you this "Restoring Confidence" is the toughest drive I ever assisted in. When I took up the work two or three weeks ago, confidence was at a mighty low ebb that is so all the Papers and speakers was saying.

Wall Street had gone into one tail spin after another. You would pick up a paper in the morning and read the stock report and you wouldent think there was that many "Minus" signs in the world. Well the effect of it was just like going to Monte Carlo and hearing that everybody was betting on the Black, and the red had been coming up continually for two days.

That would just simply demoralize southern France and the whole Riviera. Well thats what this Market was doing here. It was taking all the joy out of gambling. If it kept on like that it would discourage Gambling, and that of course would be bad for the country. (Thats what they said)

COURSE there was a lot of us dumb ones that couldent understand it. We said, "Well if somebody lost money there. Why somebody else must have made it. You cant just lose money to nobody, unless you drop it somewhere and nobody ever finds it." Then they said a good deal of the money was "Lost on paper" That is it was figures but it wasent real money. Well I had done that, I could remember every contract I would get for a seasons work on the stage or screen, my wife and I would sit down and figure out what all we would have by the end of that season.

Well at the end of the season we had the figures, but we couldent find the money. So Wall Street Men had nothing on us. In fact I dont think it had anything on anybody, for we all can take a piece of paper and if you give us enough pencil we can figure ourselves out a pretty neat little fortune in no time, so when I heard that most of the money had been lost on "Paper profits" why I felt right at home with them.

BUT then everybody said it would have a demoralizing effect on the country for so many to have their paper Profits all rubbed out at once. That it would have the effect of making people more careful with their money, and thereby make it bad for speculation. That if people dident trade in stocks why Wall Street couldent exist.

So I says what can we do for em so they will keep on existing? "Why restore confidence." And thats what I been doing for weeks, writing and talking. Course I havent been buying anything myself. I wanted to give all the other folks a chance to have confidence first. There is none of the ground Pap about me. This confidence was for sale and I wanted them to have the very first chance of buying it.

Course I never could understand what the price of the stock had to do with keeping the company working and turning out their product. For instance, if "Consolidated Corn Stock had all been sold, and the Company had that money it had brought in and was operating on that, what difference did it make to them if the stock was selling at a thousand bucks, or "if people was using the stock to kindle their fire with?

THEIR business was still to keep after those corns. In other words, they should be watching corns instead of the market. If the shares had sold for 564 one day and $1.80 the next, what had happened during the night to the afflicted toes of the country? Well I couldn't get that.

Course they explained it off someway. Said, "Trading was good for the country, and kept things a circulating." So I finally went over to their side. I really did it for vanity, for I could see all the beg men over there, and I felt flattered when I saw that I was one to join in this great work of getting people back to contributing to Wall Street again. Course there is a lot of them that is going to take me time to get back.

THEY not only lost confidence but they lost money, some of them all of their money. So we will have to wait till they get some money in some other business, perhaps in some business in which they really have no confidence. Then they will be able to get back into the market not only with new confidence but new money. Thats going to take time in some cases.

But I am telling them that the Country as a whole is "Sound," and that all those who's heads are solid are bound to get back into the market again. I tell em that this Country is bigger than Wall Street, and if they dont believe it, I show em the map.

Mr. Hoover called all the Railroad men in and they decided to do all they could to keep people from riding on Busses. Then he had all the Bankers there, and they announced what their annual Jap would be for coming year. They agreed to be more careful in their loans, and see that the borrower dident buy a farm with it, as Agriculture was so uncertain. Try and get them to invest in some business where he could read the paper in the morning and see what he had. But its a great work, and I am just crazy about it. Viva confidence.

John Gives Bugs Some Advice

THE sudden blizzard, which submerged Minnesota and Wyoming under six feet of white, proved to be John Gilbert's fan mail.

Fan mail is the leading industry of Hollywood. It arrives by train, motor, Zeppelin, dogsled and on foot.

The letter carriers of Hollywood are bowlegged from carrying it to the million-dollar Gilbert postoffice.

John was delighted to welcome us to the exit of his home. It is built in the modernistic style with the windows in the chimney and the entrance in the attic.

It was breakfast time. We ate off postcards. Our serviettes were perfumed love letters.

THE meal consisted of beautiful photographs scrambled with eggs.

"Listen to this one," John said, "since that crash in Wall Street I am afraid to read a letter that has a margin on the page.

"'Dear Mr. Gilbert. I saw you in that delightful picture Blazing Patriarchs, and fell in love with you in the orchestra. My husband was with me at the time and almost fell out of the balcony.'

"'John, sweetheart, you are a very tasty dish. Will you please send me an autographed automobile?'

"'I have been married to my husband for 60 years; we have 11 children and a kitchenette. But my husband doesn't understand me.'

"'When you kissed Greta Gabbola in that tropical fade-out, my heart changed like a traffic light. John, why don't you leave that fast Hollywood life and marry me? I can slip the old man a powder with his gumdrops.'

"WHAT do you think of that one?" John asked me. He knew I was an authority on the subject.

"Well, John," I told him, "opportunity knocks but once at every man's door."

"That's the reason we put burglar alarms on the door," John said.

"Listen to this one. 'Sweetheart, I saw you in Spontaneous Combustion. When you kissed Nita Gramboza, my pulse jumped so that my wrist watch exploded.' "

"That's a pretty good letter," I told John. "Will you give me some kissing lessons?"

"Here's another that ain't bad. 'Dear Johnnie Gilbert, your picture Blazing Whiskers is the most beautiful I ever saw. I paid a dollar for my seat and it was the first time I ever enjoyed the war tax. My boy friend got mad when I fainted when you kissed Alice Albino. Your lips cling to Alice's like a carpet sweeper hugs a Persian rug. Can you lend me ten thousand dollars until Wall Street becomes a philanthropic institution?' "

"THAT one starts as a love letter and winds up like a bill collecting agency. Got any more?"

"Here's a nice one," John remarked, taking a perfumed epistle out of the clam chowder. "'Dear John, every time you kissed Marie La Prune in your marvelous picture Smouldering Tonsils I thought I would choke. My sweetheart bought the seats, but now I go alone. If I call up from Long Island can I reverse the charges? I love your pictures. Please send me three dozen with expensive frames.'"

"Say, John," I said, "making a girl's wrist watch explode is pretty good. But I once knocked a grandfather's clock off a flight of steps."

"Here is one," John continued. "'John, dearest, I saw your picture Incandescent Lips, and when you kissed Moocha Blunkette, I got chills and fever.'

"'If you can't send me your love please send me some whisky and quinine.'"

"John," I said, "that girl needs help. If you have the whisky and quinine I will carry it personally."

"How many love letters do you get a day, Mr. Gilbert?"

"About ten thousand during my office hours from 9 to 3."

"Do you answer them all?"

"No, my manager takes 10 per cent, the letter carrier demands another 10 per cent, and I mark the rest 'Opened by Mistake.' "

"JOHN," I implored, "will you give me about a thousand of your love letters? I want to paste them on my windshield."

"Mr. Baer," John said in his most formal bathrobe, "I never saw the love letter I didn't want. I treat every one with respect and consideration. Do you know that there are a million aching hearts, a million lonely girls and a million Cinderellas dreaming of me?"

I knew I was up against a letter miser. So, like a million Cinderellas in crystal brogans, I left before the magic hour of midnight when the white horses change into mice and the beautiful carriage turns back into a pumpkin.

As I was stampeding down the avenue, I was clipped in back of the ear and knocked for a double loop.

Somebody had bopped me with my usual fan mail, a stale pie. It was an old Spanish custard.

Even When the Boys Go To College

A LETTER from Ebenezer Appleby, of the Class of 1833, Harvale College, written to his father in the fall of 1829.

"My dear sir:

"It behooves me to indite a few expressions of filial respect, and to convey to you, sir, a small budget of information concerning by behavior and experience since leaving the parental roof to enter these halls of learning that I may assiduously seek to gain that education which you, in your generosity, have placed within my reach.

"My health, both bodily and spiritual, is a source of gratification to me, and I trust this finds you in a robust condition and happily, delivered from recent attack of gout.

"Obedient to your admonitions, I am applying myself with diligence to my academic pursuits, which I am finding arduous, but none the less stimulating on that account. My professors, who are worthy, high-minded men of great erudition, do not consider my schedule of studies a particularly weighty one. It consists of seven hours of Latin a week, six hours of Greek, five hours each of mathematics, French, Biblical History, botany and literature, and three hours each of political economy, Sanskrit, the art of eloquence, organ-playing and astronomy.

"My chief recreation, aside from my work, is a daily bird-walk for an hour before breakfast, which is at seven. Yesterday I had the good fortune to spy a yellow puff-headed beetle-eater (campephagadus) and an English bearded tit-mouse (panurus biarmicus) both deemed rare in these parts.

"My evenings are given over to study, but on Saturdays ensues a period of relaxation, when, if you will pardon a vulgarism, I 'take it easy,' sometimes singing glees with my fellow students, or discussing metaphysical and theological questions with them.

"Please extend my respects to Aunt Henrietta, who, I trust, is recuperating from her recent lumbago, and accept, my dear father, my sincere sentiments of obedience and appreciation.

"Your dutiful son,

"Ebenezer."

"Birdwalk Chief Recreation."

A LETTER from Mr. Homer Appleby, to his son, Ebenezer, a freshman at Harvale College, written in 1829.

"My dear son, Ebenezer:

"Be assured of my solicitude for your well-being as you stand on the threshold of your Alma Mater. Your course of studies is far lighter than mine was when I was at Harvale in the Class of 1804, but other times, other customs, I suppose. It is my earnest hope that the idle time you will have on your hands will be profitably and honorably employed, for, beyond peradventure, the D—l finds mischief for idle hands to do. I conjure you to eschew the society of those few wastrels who are to be found everywhere these days, even in a university. I refer to the young 'bloods' who keep fast trotting horses; who frequent places of amusement; and whose conduct is neither sober nor seemly. Cultivate, my dear Ebenezer, at all times and in all places, decorum and dignity. Avoid whist, and all games of chance, for they lead to even greater folly. Should a mood of restlessness visit you, tempting you to abandon your books and expose yourself to the tawdry temptations of the city, you will find an excellent antidote in a long brisk walk in the fresh air, followed by a cold tub and the perusal of 'Pilgrim's Progress.'

"I am sending you, as you requested, your collection of birds' eggs but I trust you will not allow them to distract you from your proper occupations. Aunt Henrietta, still I regret to say a prey to her lumbago, is sending you a jar of spiced currants and a new pair of velvet earmuffs for Sabbath wear; but I warn you against any tendency you may feel to become a 'dude' or a 'dandy.'

"I remain, my dear Ebenezer,

"Your Father."

A LETTER from Kenneth Appleby, of the Class of 1933, Harvale College, written to his father in the fall of 1929.

"Hello, Dad!

"Okay so far. Hope you can read this. Went on a big party last night and rolled in at four a. m. Great gang here. I dropped forty berries playing stud. Be a good egg and wire me a hundred. I stand a chance to make quarterback on the freshman team. Banjo club is after me already. I picked a bunch of soft courses, so I think I can glide by. I'm taking two hours each week of radio announcing, Esperanto, stunt-flying, free verse and window-dressing. Better make that a hundred and fifty. Hope the market is good to you.

"Ken."

A LETTER from Mr. E. Gorham Appleby to his son, Kenneth, a freshman at Harvale College, written in 1929.

"Dear Ken:

"Enclosing a hundred. Don't mix your drinks, or draw to an inside straight. Good luck.

"Dad."

Odd Still Knows Style of The Small Town

HOW we used to handle the news in the home town daily: Bandmaster Frank Damrosch round tripped to Philadelphia Tuesday.

J. P. (Pierp) Morgan was seen strolling along Murray Hill Sunday morning.

Leo Marsh was in town from Rye for chicken coop makings Saturday.

The new Fifth Avenue Woolworth store is getting a coat of fresh red paint.

Constable Grover Whalen has told the boys around the front of the Times Square drug stores they will have to move on or he'll have the law on them.

Irvin Cobb and his family have moved into town from Easthampton, L. I., and are now at 830 Park avenue for the cold spell.

Roy Howard is on his way home from the Orient (China) with a pair of new fangled things to sleep in called pajamas.

Noel Coward, who brought his troupe over from London (England) to appear at the local opera house is on his way home for the Yuletide.

Donald Henderson Clarke, who used to gather news items, has gone and written another book about Louis Beritti, a local Chatham Square boy.

Ray Long spent three days in Chicago this week. Two years ago Mr. Long was in Florida for a week, being quite a traveler.

Charlie Driscoll has a new black ribbon for his eye specs and looks like the visiting optician from Gotham (New York).

Ring Lardner, who helped write up a show, took in two friends on passes this week. Ah, there, Ring!

Winsor MacKay, who makes chalk drawings for the newspapers, is going to have his auto painted this spring.

Otto Kahn, employed in the bank, appeared at the opening of the opera with a white silk throw around his neck. Otto never fails to catch on to the latest style.

Kin Hubbard, who works in a printing office in Indianapolis, is visiting some of his people at Bellfontaine, O.

Norman Anthony, Jr., took in the dance in Greenwich Village last Saturday night and showed the crowd a few steps of the tango, a new kind of dipping dance. Norm is very graceful, especially turning the corners.

Bernard Gimbel, who runs the general store, is getting out his golf togs (clothes) for a trip to Palm Beach.

There was a shower Wednesday, but hardly more than a sprinkle.

Jane Dixon, who used to collect personal jottings, has gone and married a West Point officer and lives there.

Sinclair "Red" Lewis is putting the finishing touches to a book at his home in the lower end of town. "Red" has written several other books that caused a lot of talk. He doesn't have to work at anything else, it pays so well.

AFTER all, New York is not entirely absorbed by curiosity over its first page scandal figures. One evening several weeks ago a huge crowd stood in a dripping rain, silently and respectful, outside a big hotel entrance. They had come for a glimpse of the small shy woman who is known as Mme. Marie Curie, of radium fame.

TO my notion this is the best advice ever written for dog lovers who have suffered the loss of their pets. It is written by Axel Munthe in his "Story of San Michele:"

"Alas! the life of a dog is so short and there are none of us who have not been in mourning for a lost friend. Your first impulses and your first words after you have laid him to rest under a tree in the park, are that you never, never wish to have another dog; no other dog could be to you what he has been. You are mistaken. It is not A dog we love; it is THE dog. They are all more or less the same, they are all ready to love you and to be loved by you. They are all representatives of the most lovable and, morally speaking, most perfect creations of God. If you loved your dear friend in the right way, you cannot do without another."

IN this year 1929, in the most enlightened metropolis of the world, a New York magistrate was forced to sound a warning to credulous men and women who are buying voo-doo charms and magic powders from fortune tellers.

THIS is the favorite poem of one of Wall Street's most reckless gamblers:

"Sundown is but the mortal eye's confusion.
Like death the great illusion.

"The spirit whose corporeal ember chills
Is bright on farther hills.

"Bird-man, fly westward with the westering light,—
Would you outdistance night."

SHAVINGS: The newest perfume importation is coal black in color and is worn on a cotton pad around the neck. . . . John D. Rockefeller, Jr., likes to prowl in second-hand bookshops. . . . Mayor Walker's tailor has quadrupled his business as the result of publicity. . . . Ona Munson and Eddie Buzzell hold hands in night clubs, although married several years. . . . Sime Silverman, of Variety, will reprint only slams about himself and paper. . . . Dorothy Parker is in Switzerland. . . . Gene Tunney is not "out" of the Social Register, as reported. . . . He was never in it. . . . The Wall Street crash was a boon to New York debt stallers. . . . Some of them even talked landlords out of a couple of months rent. . . . Four of New York's well-known night club hostesses are now in Chicago. . . . Victoria Cross, who wrote "Life's Shop Window," has just authored another hot one, "Electric Love." . . . A FOREIGN born citizen who lost $68,000 in the first dip of the market has demonstrated the spirit that makes America great. He had retired but went immediately to work for $24 a week and shows a bank book with a $6 deposit every week since he began again to build a fortune.

I HAD no idea there were so many liars in the world until I began listening to romanticists tell how much the other fellow lost in the recent market plunge.

THERE seems to be a perverse streak in some types of humanity that causes many secretly to gloat just a little over another's misfortune.

Between Us Girls

By LLOYD MAYER

Sandie Hears All About Borneo

"WHO'S this odd soul who's going to TALK, my dear?" whispered Sandie, as she and Dolly took seats in the auditorium which had been hired by the Junior League for a visiting lecturer.

"Heaven only KNOWS, my dear!" said Dolly. "Oh, I know," she added a moment later, "it's that Mrs. Pearl Swoon, who's been out in BORNEO or Timbuctoo or somewheres."

"My GARDen TOOLS, my dear!" gasped Sandie. "I wish we'd gone to the MOVies—but we get CREDit for Junior LEAGUE work by BEing here, don't we?"

"Heavens, I HOPE so, my dear! Oh, sweet SASSafras—LOOK at her!"

"My dear, I can't BEAR it!" giggled Sandie as Mrs. Swoon swept majestically from the wings on to the platform, accompanied by Mildred Blobb, who proceeded to introduce her.

"GIRLS," said Mildred simperingly, "we are very fortunate in having with us today Mrs. Pearl Swoon, who has been doing such wonderful work among the indiginous—I mean indigent—natives of—er—Borneo. Mrs. Swoon certainly needs no introduction, because she has given her life to these—er—natives, and her interesting experiences are well known to all of us, so I am sure you are going to enjoy hearing about them from Mrs. Swoon, who has really given her life to these — er — indignant — I mean indiginous — aborigines, so I shall not waste any more of your time by introducing Mrs Swoon, who, as I said, needs no introduction!"

Whereupon Mildred smiled at Mrs. Swoon and took a seat on the platform.

"Wasn't she TERrible?" said Sandie, nudging Dolly. "HONestly, I thought I'd have hysTERics, my dear!"

"Members and friends of the Junior League," began Mrs Swoon impressively, "I want to take you with me along way from here to a strange, primitive land. Picture to yourselves if you can, a dark jungle. As you look at it, it seems to be a mere mass of great trees, but on looking closer you will perceive strange dark faces peering at you from the dank foliage."

"SHE must have got that DRESS there!" gurgled Sandie.

"These pathetic faces," went on Mrs. Swoon, "are those of my dear friends, the Hoo-Hoos, who are awaiting my return. Gumbo, their chief, comes forward to greet me as I step ashore from the 'rumpa,' or native canoe, which has brought me from the ship. He makes a deep obeisance and I reach into a box of useful gifts (which have been donated to the 'cause' by my dear friends in America) and pull out a derby hat, which I present to him.

"His childish delight is wonderful to behold. Putting on the hat, he dances around, and although he has practically nothing else on but this old derby, he is just as pleased as if he were completely dressed."

"Perhaps more so!" suggested Dolly sotto voce.

"My dear, she SIMply SLAYS me!" chortled Sandie convulsed.

"It is this charming simplicity and naivete that won me to my friends the savage Hoo-Hoos," Mrs. Swoon was saying, "and led to my dedicating my life to uplifting them.

"And how they needed uplifting! Oh, my dear girls, if you could only have been with me when I first landed in Goopa, their capital. Conditions were simply frightful! There were bars dispensing vile alcoholic concoctions, but not a bar of soap or a bar of music to dispense cleanliness and culture!

"TODAY there are 37 laundrys and 43 phonographs in Goopa. Seventy-five per cent of the population brushes its teeth with the community toothbrush.

"And it is all due to the generosity of groups like you girls here that this has been made possible."

"At THIS point, my dear," whispered Sandie, "she's about to ask for a couple of grand piANos and a TOWN car for Chief GUMbo, I bet!"

"Before closing this intimate little talk," pursued Mrs. Swoon sweetly, "I am going to tell you very boldly what we need very desperately, and I am going to urge you with all my heart to give, even if it means a certain sacrifice on your part.

"All these things are needed most urgently: Coat hangers, rolling pins, fruit reamers, trapezes, tomato cans, corsets, double boilers, shaving mugs, perambulators, megaphones, ice boxes, shoe trees, opera glasses, clothes pins, skaters and coal shovels.

"NOW, has anyone," beamed Mrs. Swoon in conclusion, any questions?"

"My dear, I think I'll ask her if they could use an old hot water bottle that has just a slight leak," tittered Dolly.

"ACtually, my dear, you VANquish me comPLETEly," murmured Sandie.

"Do you suppose, Mrs. Swoon," inquired a serious-looking young matron very earnestly, "that Hoo-Hoo mothers would be interested in hearing about our campaign to end debutante parties at 3 o'clock in the morning?"

"I think," replied the lecturer warmly, "that's such a commendable undertaking, but, you see, my dear, Hoo-Hoos would hardly understand the subject, as there is practically no social life in Goopa and all the native girls of debutante age are training to become bearded ladies in side shows. Does that answer your question?

"Oh, quite," replied the young matron. "I forgot for a moment that we were talking about Darkest Africa."

"Borneo," Mrs. Swoon correctly gently. "Are there any more questions? . . . If not, I am going to have Happi-Boy, one of the brightest of the younger Hoo-Hoo men of Goopa pass the cocoanut gourd, and whatever you desire to contribute will be placed in the fund now being raised to promote friendly relations between this country and Hoo-Hoo-Land."

"At THIS point, my dear," murmured Sandie, "I think it's HIGH time we were BARging HENCE, on account of I'd rather squander my THIRTY-five cents on a MOVie and take a CHANCE on letting the HOO-Hoos stay MAD at us, do you know what I mean?"

The Nuts Want To See Desert

MUTTER—Well, Mr. Mumble, we've finally arrived in Egypt. Do you want to stay here in Cairo for awhile?

MUMBLE—No. I'm anxious to see the desert.

MUTTER—You're crazy; it's too hot right now. The heat out there is intense.

MUMBLE—It's what?

MUTTER—Intense.

MUMBLE—That's all right; we don't have to go in any tents.

MUTTER—Then, what do you expect to sleep in?

MUMBLE—My underwear.

MUTTER—Have you ever been over the desert at 120?

MUMBLE—No, but I've gone around a golf course in 118.

MUTTER—You can make the journey if you want; there's a camel over there.

MUMBLE—I wouldn't want that one; he's bent in the middle.

MUTTER—A camel is the only animal for the desert. One drink of water lasts him eight days.

MUMBLE—That's nothing. One drink of bootleg booze in America often lasts a man a lifetime.

MUTTER—You'll find the desert pretty hot. Are you used to heat?

MUMBLE—Certainly; I inherit it.

MUTTER—You inherit it?

MUMBLE—Sure. My father was a flaming youth and my step-mother was a red hot mamma.

MUTTER—Instead of visiting the desert, wouldn't you like to to take a boat down the Nile?

MUMBLE—Yes, but I haven't got a pilot's license.

MUTTER—We could see the Sphinx.

MUMBLE—What's that?

MUTTER—It's a stone lion with a woman's head, and has been silent for thousands of years. Of course the woman is a myth.

Prayer of Old Incas Thrills by Eloquence

POPE in his Universal Prayer, Emerson in his transcendental musings, have caught at the essential unity of all religions. But nothing could top this more effectively than a Prayer of the Ancient Peruvians quoted in a volume compiled by Grace H. Turnbull. She calls her book "Tongues of Fire" (published by Macmillan), and it contains the best thoughts from all sorts of sacred scriptures and inspired philosophies. Plotinus and Seneca are there, King Asoka and Gautama Buddha, Zarathushtra and Mohammed. None surpasses the eloquence of this old Incan prayer:

"O Pachamac, Thou, who hast existed from the beginning and shalt exist to the end, powerful and pitiful, who createst man by saying 'Let man be,' who defendest us from evil and preservest our life and health, art Thou in the sky or in the earth, in the clouds or in the depths? Hear the Voice of him who implores Thee, and grant him his petitions. Give us life everlasting, preserve us, and accept this our sacrifice."

Such was the prayer of the people the Christian Pizarro slaughtered for their gold, as it is written in the books of Prescott the historian. Is it any wonder that Christianity still has hundreds of millions of heathen unconverted?

There is a book about "The Recovery of Jesus" (published by Bobbs-Merrill), which endeavors to bring Christianity back to the primitive teachings of the Galilean. Walter E. Bundy, its author, is professor of the English Bible at DePauw. He admits that the famous book of Strauss is the best life of Jesus we have to date. He admits that we have no life of Jesus, but only "problems of the life of Jesus." But he holds that by a literary, historical and human approach, the real Jesus may be discerned behind the traditional Christ.

"Jesus stood on the Western front a forlorn figure, actually deserted by those who theoretically deified him, hearing in wordless wonder the world's judgment against himself." That world had stripped off his seamless robe to "clothe him in khaki, horizon blue, or service gray."

Even the Prophets of the old dispensation have been forgotten in our dispensation of profits, and Edward Chauncey Baldwin's book, "The Prophets" (published by Nelson), leads one to wonder what would happen to those eloquent rebels if they came back and translated their message into modern meanings.

All of which may explain the phenomena that are at the bottom of Harry Elmer Barnes' startling book, "The Twilight of Christianity" (published by Vanguard). Dedicated to John H. Dietrich, formerly a Pittsburgher, this onslaught goes even beyond the modernists in its arraignment of the historic religion and what he calls "the Jesus stereotype." Barnes' book is "theological dynamite." He calmly assumes "Plato's superiority over Jesus," and he cheerfully announces that "what is needed most today in the religious field is a wrecking machine."

Well, his book is a formidable battering ram. It is another of the numerous volumes like those of Joseph McCabe or Haldeman-Julius' "The Outline of Bunk" (published by Stratford), who tells us that "leading a pure and noble life is precisely the same kind of thing as dressing properly and taking off one's hat to a lady. Righteousness, good manners, fashion—they are all one."

Speaking Effectively

As an aid to those who speak in public, George Eric Peabody calls "How to Speak Effectively" (published by Wiley), but, alas, his first requisite is having something to say. If you have something to say, then don't divide attention; stick to a point until it is driven home to the audience. Most important of all, when the speech is finished stop at once. Somehow this seems to put the whole art of oratory into a nutshell.

Best Sellers in Pittsburgh

The following books are selling best in Pittsburgh book stores, according to lists furnished by Brentano's, J. R. Weldin Company, Jones Book Shop, Priscilla Guthrie's Book Shop, Hays' Book Shop, Kaufmann's Book Department, Horne's Book Department, Gimbels' Book Department and Boggs & Buhl's Book Department:

"It's A Great Life," by Mary Lee.
"Sincerity," by Lin Yutang.
"Hodge Race, Psychic," by Edith Wheeler.
"A Farewell to Arms," by Ernest Hemingway.
"Laughing Boy," by Oliver Lafarge.
"The Hawbucks," by John Masefield.
"Story of Wall Street," by Robert Irving Warshow.

The Adolescent

Leta S. Hollingworth, of Teachers College, Columbia University, in "The Psychology of the Adolescent" (published by Appleton), points out the dangers of parental domination and attachment to parents. In her chapter on "Finding the Self," Miss Hollingworth avers that there is in every adolescent the possibility of developing into any one of a considerable variety of selves. As an illustration she brings in William James, who admitted that he would fain have been a priest and a pirate, a philosopher and a lady-killer, all of which could not dwell together in the same clay. One young girl was torn between the struggle to be a deaconess and a circus rider. She spent mornings reading the Bible and afternoons riding an old horse bareback around the pasture.

Among the New Novels

The Embezzlers

We're apt to associate Russian writers with the morbid and gloomy. Valentine Kataev in "The Embezzlers" (published by Dial Press) proves they can be equally facile in writing humor. The story has particular interest as it is of present-day Russia under the Soviet regime, a period as yet hardly touched by contemporary fiction. The story is of an accountant and a cashier, who, on their way from the bank with a large sum of the firm's money, stop for a friendly drink and wake up to find themselves embezzlers. Kataev is a fine creator of characters, manipulating them with sardonic skill. His style is redolent of detail, and his humor is that cynical smile engendered by human frailty. There isn't a funny line nor a wisecrack in the whole story.

The Patchwork Madonna

A plot revealed in conversations between an actress and her psychoanalyst advisor forms the rather unsubstantial framework for Harold Weston's "The Patchwork Madonna," (published by Morrow. If you can't be good, be clever, is good advice only if you can manage to be clever. Weston's cleverness is forced and unnatural, and is based on a premise so open to debate that the dialogue reads most of the time like a sanity test. Written as a satire of psychoanalysis, the story could have been highly entertaining but to be taken seriously it asks a bit too much of jaded worldlings in 1929.

From Nowhere

Through Dr. Withers, a retired physician, Christy Cunningham in "The Message from Nowhere" (published by Stratford) tries to prove that each person has a soulmate, even though they're never consciously known to each other. It's Goethe's old idea in the "Wahlverwandtschaften," insipidly sentimentalized.

Detective Duff

The last book from the pen of the late Harvey O'Higgins is a series of cases unraveled by his interesting sleuth. "Detective Duff Unravels It" (published by Liveright) tells how a mysterious series of crimes are solved by a new process. Duff works on the theory that all crimes are committed in two places, at the scene of the crime and in the mind of the criminal. These mysteries are solved by applied psychology, and the theory provides a distinct relief from the usual sleuth with gumshoes and magnifying glass.

Secret of the Flames

A particularly well-developed plot is unfolded in Ralph Rodd's story, "The Secret of the Flames" (published by Dial Press). When old Mr. Vibart was burned to death in his house no one would have suspected murder. But Dr. Keith Stanger, seeing the fire, got there in time to see what lay in the heart of the flames, and is drawn into the web of deductions and adventures which follow. An amazing but credible solution ends the tale.

The Clue of the Clock

The astounding performances of a super-crook make Marion Harvey's thriller, "The Clue of the Clock" (published by Clode). The Eagle commits his depredations with the finesse of an artist. He is a polished gentleman, a romantic lover, and a connoisseur of rare and valuable antiques. His battle to the death with The Vulture, rival for the throne of Crookdom, is as exciting as Hector and Achilles.

The New Idol

The famous Gaston Leroux stories rank high in the realm of mystery fiction. But the latest from the pen of this imaginative Frenchman, "The New Idol" (published by Macaulay), while it lacks nothing of his ingenuity, depends too much on French political intrigue to strike the usual responsive chord with the American public. Leroux's favorite character, Cheri-Bibi, is again the elusive mystery element, and the book forms an important link in the history of this same Cheri-Bibi, but the interest is a bit too locally French for the Yankee palate.

Old Lattimer's Legacy

The indefatigable J. S. Fletcher's latest, "Old Lattimer's Legacy" (published by Clode), shows a return of the old Fletcher power, which seemed waning in this author's last few novels. Fletcher knows the game perfectly and can always be counted on to furnish the elements that make mystery reading one of the famous indoor sports. The new story deals with the adventures of an unexpected legacy in catching up with an unsuspecting young man, and is more of a romance than a mystery thriller.

Motherhood In Bondage

Margaret Sanger's "Motherhood in Bondage" (published by Brentano) is a record of letters she has received from women all over the country. Many tell of the poverty that oppresses them, others fear illness or degeneracy in their children. Mrs. Sanger says of American child marriages: "Relatively speaking these cases are as bad as those recorded in India." Her book is a powerful plea for birth control, or rather, for making such information accessible to the ignorant who multiply in misery.

'LAND PROBLEM IS VITAL TO PROGRESS OF NATION,' SAYS PASCUAL ORTIZ RUBIO

Chief Executive-elect Tells Plans to Stabilize Mexican Finances, Reconstruct Agriculture, Stimulate Production, Improve Living Conditions and Promote Amity With U. S.

By PASCUAL ORTIZ RUBIO,
President-elect of the Republic of Mexico.

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 30.

IT IS best to state at once that the program of my government will be the same as that approved by the National Revolutionary Party Convention at Queretaro last March.

The Mexican Revolution has entered a phase obviously constructive. The forces which imperiled the definite triumph of this ideal have now been entirely eliminated.

I believe the governments of Presidents Obregon, Calles and Portes Gil have followed the precise courses which we will have to follow in the future to reach the goal contemplated.

The natural desire for well-being and prosperity among our people ought to be expressed adequately in official spheres in such a way that we can better the country's economic state by an increase in general production and by a more equal distribution of riches. This necessitates discipline, co-operation, persistency and an exact knowledge of the ends sought.

I do not mean to suggest that the government should be occupied exclusively with fostering material prosperity at the expense of moral and social requirements. But in the general situation economic problems form the basis of the social structure. It would be useless to attempt the solution of other questions without attending to the urgent need of elevating the standards of living among the masses of the Mexican people.

Must Sacrifice
Should Re-arrange System of Taxation

Ostentation in governments cannot be maintained except by community sacrifices and extensive damage to private business. As long as the tax system is not based on a true knowledge of the conditions of private business it will not be possible to establish public finances on a permanent basis.

Our principal financial policy should be to create a national state of solvency of such a character that government obligations such as maintenance of public services and the payment of both interior and exterior debts can be met promptly.

In the social field the labor incumbent on the government is far-reaching. National unity has not been possible because of the heterogeneous elements which have crossed our path.

The difficulties of our situation can be seen in the fact that complete nationalization could not be accomplished by giving special privileges to the mestizo and European elements to the detriment of our immense majority of Indians.

Nor would it be wise to enforce a condition of stagnancy on the first class while attempting to better the economic standards of the majority. A middle course ought to serve as a standard for the government.

Paralleling this problem is that of conserving a Mexican culture resulting from the mixture of the two great cultures which make up our country—the Indian and the Spanish. As a consequence there will be formulated an ideal type of culture which will combine the best of both government and cultural efforts.

Another important factor is that relating to the land question. The end sought, it seems to me, should be to obtain the maximum production for the maximum benefit, both individual and collective.

Respect Rights
Property Rights Will Be Observed, He Says

In the light of this principle the complicated questions relating to property and the rights which the state has the privilege of imposing for the public benefit, resolve themselves almost automatically.

Property will be respected in so far as it serves the general welfare, and property will be abolished in so far as it fails to comply with this purpose.

The results of the old system can be noted by all. It is general poverty, our financial tribute to the world outside, and the emigration of our workers who leave us to help enrich other countries.

In view of all this the obligation rests on us to continue steadfastly the program of land allotments, the organization of co-operatives and the extension of agricultural credits started by Gen. Obregon.

I will re-bolster the National Bank of Agricultural Credit and also the land banks for financing small proprietors, with the object of placing all resources possible within the reach of farmers. We will aid them to sell their products, to buy implements and stock.

I urge also the application of irrigation methods and the use of machinery on our farms. I believe that there will be a return to the land on the part of many who have been seduced away often by dreams of high salaries in industry. Finally, I will advocate the allotment of lands to middle-class farmers.

I contend that to make up the present lack in our agricultural population we should undertake a policy of colonization. We should open our

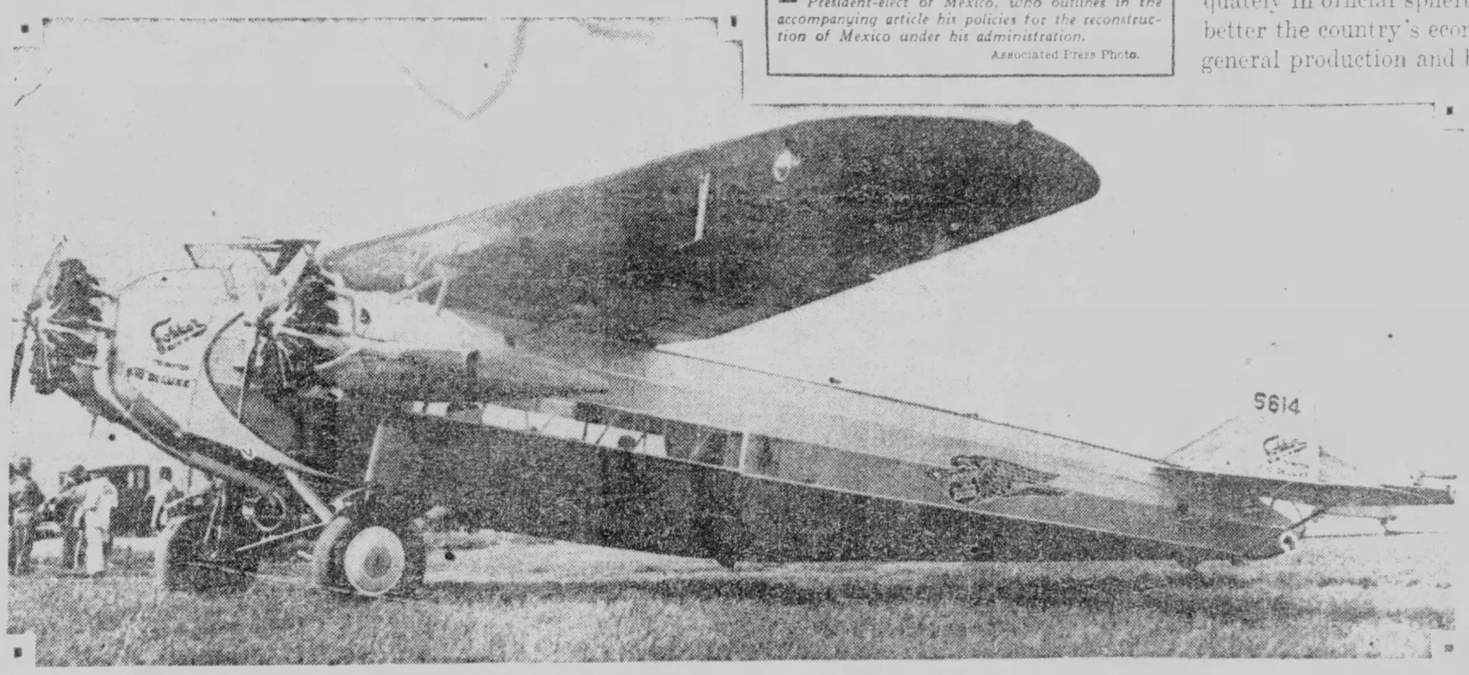
'BIG AIRCRAFT INCREASE EFFICIENCY AND ECONOMY'

"With Planes Carrying 10,000 Pounds at 200 Miles an Hour, Aviation Could Transport Passengers and Express at Railroad Rates"

By HARRIS M. HANSHUE
President, Western Air Express; President, Fokker Aircraft Corporation; Pioneer in Air Mail and in Passenger Transport by Air.

As Told to Earl Reeves.



TO the average man a new giant plane is a thing of wonder and romance, able to perform veritable miracles.

The imagination pictures each new marvel in some hitherto impossible feat. It may lap the globe, perhaps, or carry a hundred across an ocean—or shrink a hemisphere to the size of Connecticut. Once aroused, the public imagination races on.

There may be a jolt, therefore, for the reader in a declaration that for the airway operator each new giant of the air rates in significance in fractions of pennies.

The single performance means little; the stunt means less. What we seek is new load capacity, higher speeds, longer range—and economy. Of these four unromantic things the last is the most important, and is an outgrowth of the others. Every major advance in aviation has been built on the mastery of some basic financial obstacle. Therefore I stress a condition when I say that—

It is the giant plane which will bring aviation within reach of and in touch with millions, WHEN we have mastered the penny-fractions, and not before.

But as that time arrives, giants will perform hourly feats which would seem visionary if I ventured to forecast them today.

Romance Seen
Dr. Dornier Marks Great Improvement

If turning a spectacular stunt into an hourly service ranks as romance, then, perhaps, we also can be said to see some romance in the business of establishing air transportation.

Dr. Dornier has marked a milestone in aviation by proving that a heavier-than-air machine can be built which is capable of carrying tremendous loads. He has made a big stride in the adaptation of power plants to huge air transports.

General Motors, with which we are allied, several months ago bought the American manufacturing rights in Dr. Dornier's models.

Anthony Fokker has gone to Europe to examine the Dornier plane and plans, and bring home an engineer's and designer's recommendations regarding manufacture here.

Finally, Dr. Dornier himself has arrived to confer with General Motors and Fokker officials.

This series of events, following upon the successful transport of 169 persons in a single plane, is such as to give rise to a popular guess that the aeronautical millenium again is just around the corner, and 150-passenger planes soon will be soaring overhead in direct competition with rail and steam transport.

But no conservative business man or engineer can, at this stage, measure the exact place of the DO-X, a seaplane of unprecedented size, in the world's air transport system which thus far has been plotted almost wholly overland. For neither the engineer nor the air transport expert is there sufficient cost and performance data available.

Some judgment of the stride this ship represents may be gained from recalling that up to a relatively short time ago there was no airplane in the world which had been designed primarily for passenger use. Such passenger planes as were operating were war planes, with war equipment removed, and

'Only Way to Assure Food Ships' Safety Is to Abolish War Itself From World'

HERRIOT

By EDOUARD HERRIOT,
Former Premier of France.

PARIS, Nov. 30.

WITH all due respect to President Hoover and consideration for the supreme humanitarian motives prompting him, Europe feels it must voice its objections to his Armistice Day speech. I have read with the respect it merits his speech. America's illustrious statesman has discussed the freedom of the seas and asks that measures be taken in the case of war to avoid the torpedoing of foodships, to keep up the supply of food, and to prevent the suffering of helpless women and children. To the theory, Europe answers, "Brave, Fine, Courageous, Noble!"

Easily recognizable in the proposition is President Hoover's generous spirit that during the World War rendered an immense service to our unfortunate population of the north. But since President Hoover submits the idea to the consideration of the world, and since he wishes to expose the plan to the examination of independent thought, I must frankly voice what to my mind are the grave objections his proposals raise.

Theoretically, it is understood that private citizens should preserve the right of free trading in wartime. One might admit also that a proclamation of the freedom of the seas might contribute to the reduction of armaments since nations construct warships partly to assure themselves of the continued arrival of necessary imports to assure the safety of exports. Universally, we condemn blockade as a barbarous measure.

But the precise problem put before us is to find if blockade can be eliminated, in the hypothesis of war would it be maintained, and if one can reconcile the fact of war with the principle of the freedom of the seas. There, indeed, is the difficulty that must be grappled. In other words, and as the London Daily News asks, "Can one humanize war if unfortunately it is not outlawed?" We think not. It is a sad but incontestable truth that notwithstanding our utterances on the progress of civilization, war has become more and more ferocious.

Should Study Subject
War Long Ago Exceeded All Limits Within Human Reason, He Says

In recent years it has taken the form of a scourge which challenges all the forces and all the resources of nations. It is a great subject for reflection, not only for philosophers but for politicians and enlightened men, to see that war long ago exceeded all the limits within which human reason tried to enclose it and that the period of chivalry is still a long way off.

The code of "the humane war" seems to us as out of style as those collections of armor accumulated by Sir Walter Scott at the Abbotsford estate. What has become of the antique Roman notion "justum bellum?" In the nineteenth century, a great effort was made to humanize war.

One may connect with this work, which sought to limit conflict to the shock of military forces, either the declaration of April 16, 1856, on the abolition of privateering, or particularly the admirable instructions for "campaign years" edited in 1863 by Liber at the instigation of President Lincoln, or the Geneva Convention of August 22, 1864, relative to the treatment of the wounded and sick, or the act of the Emperor of Russia in assembling in 1874 the International Conference of Brussels, or the Convention of St. Petersburg of December 11, 1868, forbidding the use of explosive bullets. So much for attempts to humanize war. It would be even more interesting in this regard to conjure the curious figure of Franz Liber.

But the twentieth century, in four years, destroyed all that work. Even the limitations relative to declarations of war are violated. Unaffected private citizens undergo the same rigors of combat as those meted out to soldiers. No more explosive bullets perhaps, but all the resources of chemistry in the service of destruction, no more rules for the limitation of bombardments, no more distinctions between open and fortified towns.

The Protocolarry Law of 1868 which required all bodies to be buried is likewise disrespected. Human bodies have rotted on barbed wire entanglements because of war which knew no limits and permitted no truce. No more returning to mothers the bodies of their children, no more protection of noncombatants, no more suspension of hostilities.

The occupation of conquered territories was carried out under most barbarous conditions. Once it was considered an unwritten law obliging the occupant to respect the sovereignty of the rights of an occupied country. All that was changed. There was no respect for person or private property, women and children were submitted to the same vexations and privations as men. In the historic conflict with war, the law which tried to humanize it has

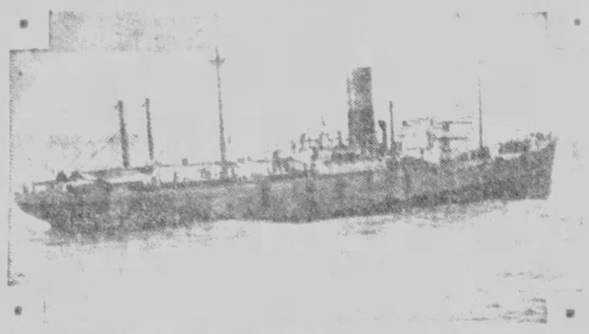
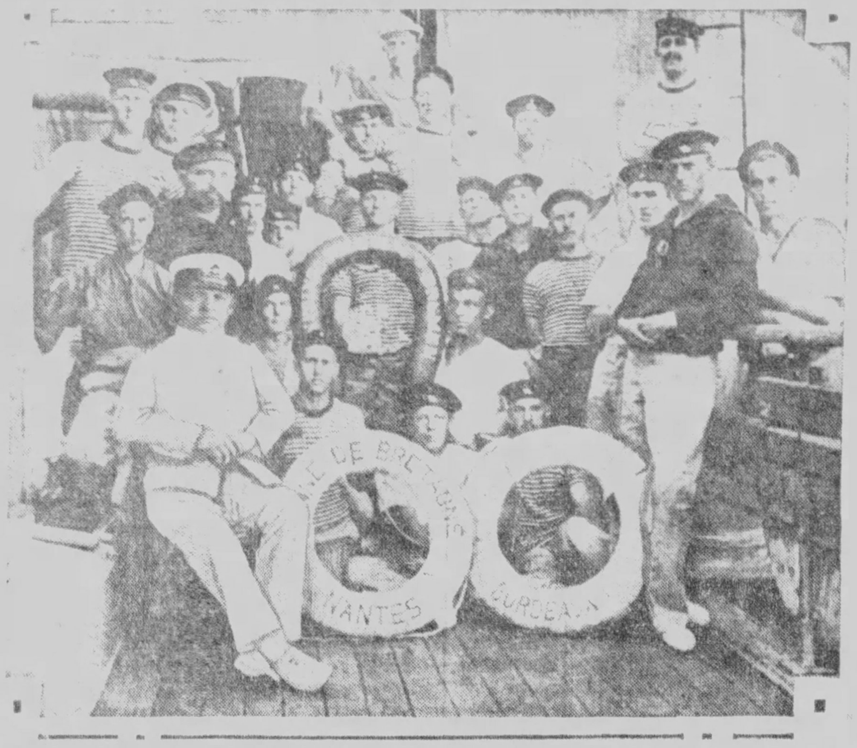
RAIDING with the KRONPRINZ WILHELM by COUNT ALFRED VON NIEZYCHOWSKI

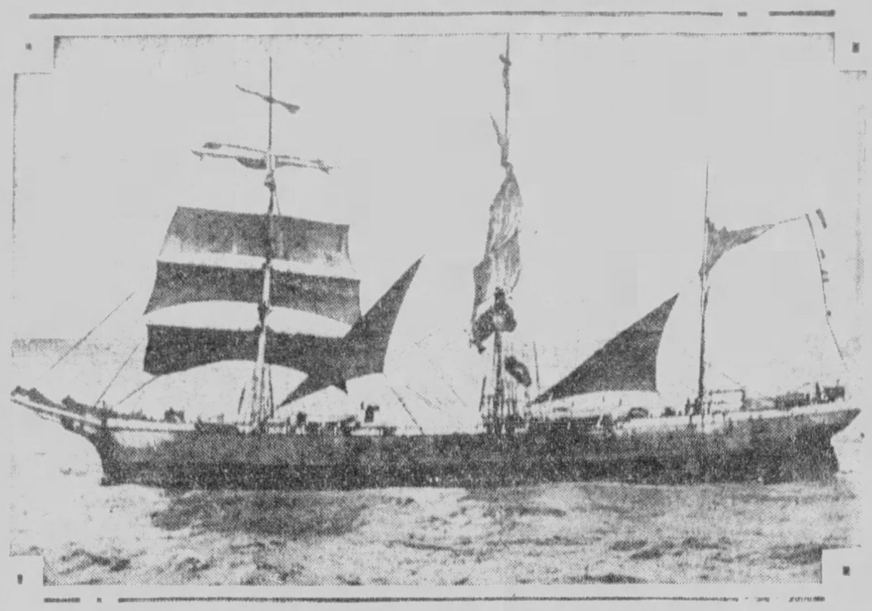
'We Captured Two Ships, Sank One in Single Day of Feverish Work'



CAUGHT AFTER CHASE—The Mont Agel, a new vessel, which fled for an hour from the Kronprinz with its wireless sputtering frantically for help before it surrendered. Then it was discovered that this ship, which of all prizes had made the most desperate effort to escape, was carrying no cargo, but was sailing in ballast. She was rammed and sunk quickly.



ABOARD THE PRIZE—The crew put aboard the French sailing vessel Anne de Bretagne after its capture by the Kronprinz Wilhelm, photographed holding life preservers of the Anne and the Union as trophies. To these men fell the task of taking off the meagre spoils of war found in the hold of the captive craft.



DEFIANT TO THE FINISH—The gallant French windjammer, Anne de Bretagne, which was loaded with lumber and frustrated all efforts of the Kronprinz to send her to the bottom. She resisted shell fire, incendiary bullets, dynamiting and repeated rammings (in which the Kronprinz' prow was damaged), and finally had to be abandoned, a driving derelict hull down on the wind-swept sea.

'Union Rolled Beneath Waves, But Second Bark Defied All Efforts to Sink Her; Was Deserted for New Prize'

IN previous installments, Count Niezychowski related how the Kronprinz Wilhelm, converted from a German passenger liner into an auxiliary cruiser on the high seas, captured its first three Allied merchantmen shortly after the outbreak of the World War. On the third prize, the pitching, leaking little French bark Union, a crew put aboard from the raider was facing death in a heavy sea when the Kronprinz abandoned them to swoop down upon another victim. Count Niezychowski now resumes his narrative.

By COUNT ALFRED VON NIEZYCHOWSKI

Lieutenant and Watch Officer on the German Liner Kronprinz Wilhelm During Her Sensational Career as a Sea Raider.

THE men aboard the Union were deeply disappointed to see us steaming away toward the horizon. They could not see the ship we had sighted and did not know whether we were chasing or being chased.

Count Niezychowski.

At 6:30 a. m. we reached the prize, a French three-masted bark of Nantes named the Anne de Bretagne.

Her cargo consisted of a load of lumber, which she was carrying from Fredrikstad, Norway, to Newcastle, Australia.

The pretty French flag of the Anne de Bretagne was at once hauled down and her crew—26 men in all—were taken aboard and lodged in the customary second-class prisoners' quarters. Among this crew were two Swedes and one Dane, all of whom could speak German. They at once set up a lively chatter with some of our crew in order to ingratiate themselves.

Scholke, our comedian, began a loud conversation with the Dane, pretending to be the man's long-lost brother. Falling about the astonished stranger's neck, he held him tight, cried, told him how glad he was to see him again after all this time, and generally acted a genuine part.

At first the Dane in his astonishment began to protest. Then, expecting to win his way into the good graces of the ship by taking up the part, he pretended to recognize a forgotten brother in Scholke. At this the men roared with laughter.

Dane Is Duped
Captive Deceived by Comedian's Protestations

Scholke changed his tune now, and tried to persuade the Dane that he had made a mistake—that the Dane was only a former friend of his who owed him some money. Scholke now demanded payment. It was side-splitting to see the comedian insist and the Dane angrily protest.

A line attached to our towing cable was thrown to the Anne de Bretagne, and a sailor named Joseph Zelinka ran out to haul in the line. Hardly had he reached the tip of the bowsprit when his vessel and ours approached with a collision inevitable. Too late the man saw his danger. He must be crushed to death.

But at the very instant of collision an intervening stroke of Providence raised the prow of the Anne de Bretagne on the crest of a wave. In a flash Zelinka leaped to our railing with the upward heave of the ship, and clambered out of reach just as the ships crashed together below him.

The line fastened, the bark was taken to tow. We now steamed in all haste back toward the Union, which we knew we had left in bad straits. We found her lying almost over on her port side.

Despite the efforts of her brave crew at the pumps, there were already one and one-half meters of water in her hold, and it was only a question of time before she must go to the bottom.

It was therefore imperative to get the exhausted men from her decks. Night was fast coming on and we believed the Union could hardly stay afloat until morning.

Our prize boat pulled for the lee side of the bark, which was her port. When it reached the Union, however, the men found the bark pitching and rolling. At any moment a heavy surge might throw the whole vessel over on the port side; such a movement would drown every man in the boat.

The prize crew, therefore, rowed away again and circled around to starboard, where, after heroic efforts in the teeth of a heavy wind and a violent sea, they came alongside the Union.

As the little craft rose and fell and dashed against the sides of the Union her crew had to exert every effort to keep their boat from being shattered to bits. Meanwhile the men on the Union clambered down the leaning vessel's side, watched their chance, and one by one leaped into the boat.

Birds as Fish
Crew Amuses Self Snaring Giant Albatross

Both wind and waves were now uniting to drive it against the larger vessel. Finally, rewarded luckily with a combined lurch of the vessel and heave of the sea, and pulling as if possessed, the men got away. Drenched to the skin and completely exhausted, they at last had reached our side.

When Sunday, the twenty-second of November, dawned, we expected to find the Union gone to the bottom, but the bark was still miraculously afloat. Commander Thierfelder at once sent a crew over to her to make a final attempt to save those precious 900 tons of coal, remaining in her hold, but try as it would, it could not safely come alongside. For two hours it fought the sea, but at last it gave up the attempt.

At 11 o'clock that day all hands were given their Sabbath holiday.

A peculiar sport now began.

Our ship had been followed by great numbers of the albatross. This huge bird—the largest, in fact, of all aquatic birds—resembles a monstrous duck, is a yard or more in height, and has yellow webbed feet lacking a hind toe, a long white body, and a back streaked or dusted with gray or brownish stripes.

An elongated, strong beak is especially prominent, and the upper mandible of this is hooked sharply downward at the end. When in flight, the bird measures on the average about 10 feet from wing tip to wing tip.

The peculiar downward hook of the upper beak and the bird's habit of alighting on the water to pick up any food that may be thrown overboard have given rise to a harmless sport—that of "painless" fishing for the albatross.

To catch the albatross special tackle was necessary. A copper plate was sawed out so as to make a hollow square about three inches wide on the inside. To one corner of this plate was attached a line.

The two contiguous sides of the square frame opposite this corner were then baited with pork and the whole was thrown overboard.

The instant the albatross seized the bait the sailor pulled on the line. This caused the hook of the bill to catch on the baited copper plate so that the bird could not let loose so long as the sailor pulled on the line. The man, therefore, kept pulling rapidly hand over hand until the huge bird was safely towed up the side of the ship into his arms, to be released shortly and soon afterward caught again.

Fire on Ship
Kronprinz Gunners Use Captive for Practice

While some of the holiday-making crew were thus busy catching and teasing the stupid albatross, a cry went up suddenly that the Union was sinking. At about 4 p. m. the fated vessel suddenly lay completely over on her side, rapidly filled, and at 4:15 p. m. disappeared under the surface. The Union had sailed her last sea.

Monday afternoon we brought the Anne de Bretagne on our port and took on provisions, wine, sailcloth, baggage, paint and a winch.

At 5 p. m., when we had taken out all of her usable cargo, and our crew had once more come aboard us, we let go the bark and stood off to port, whereupon the order "Clear for action!" sounded. The Anne de Bretagne was to be attacked for practice.

We now steamed about two miles away, then turned around and again made for the bark. At 4,000 meters our two guns began shooting 22 rounds apiece, 16 shell and 6 incendiary.

The bark showed important hits and was on fire forward. The blaze was soon extinguished, however, by lack of air and because of water in the hold.

Despite our good shooting, the Anne de Bretagne sank but little, her cargo of wood keeping her afloat.

At 7:30 in the evening we steamed down upon the bark at half speed, intending to cut her in two amidships. There was a tremendous crash, a tremor went through our ship, but when we backed away the Anne de Bretagne was still afloat.

Three times we tried to cut the vessel in two, but still the bark obstinately held together. At the fourth ramming our own ship began to leak. The plates of our prow had buckled.

Defies Dynamite
Anne de Bretagne Frustrates All Assaults

Foiled in our attempt at ramming, we sent a boat over to dynamite the bark. A spectacular explosion followed, sending a shower of debris into the air, but when the smoke cleared away, though the bow of the Anne was shattered, the mainmast still stood intact. This mast was of hollow steel 135 feet high, which accounted for its sturdiness. We again planted charges. Again the result was the same. The mainmast stood and the ship, though completely filled with water, was kept afloat by her cargo of wood.

Once more we tried ramming, but the force of our collision caused the now weakened mainmast to sway over our deck. We held our breath, but it stayed in place. Had it fallen it would have shattered our bridge.

This dangerous experiment could not be repeated, so we stood off. At midnight, when the mast still held up its head, we gave the Anne de Bretagne into the care of Neptune and left her, a driving derelict upon the wind-swept sea.

For the next week we settled down to routine and repair work. As our prow had leaked as a result of the fruitless ramming of the Anne de Bretagne, we pumped out the forepeak and filled it solid with concrete.

At 5:30 on the morning of December 4 I was roused from my bunk by the call "Clear for action!" A fair-sized steamer was on the horizon. It was the English steamer Bellevue of Glasgow.

The Bellevue came to a halt at our command, surrendered, and gave up her papers to our prize crew which had immediately been dispatched to her.

Her cargo consisted of 2,800 tons of cargo coal, 1,000 tons of bunker coal, large quantities of machine parts packed in boxes, tons of gun metal, two automobiles with extra parts (especially spare wheels), 12 live oxen, a plentiful supply of beautifully dyed wool, and a rich cellar of wines and whisky.

The automobiles were intended for a German firm in La Plata. We thus saw that British business sense was not drawing patriotic lines.

Officers and crew of the steamer—33 in all—were ordered aboard the Kronprinz The prisoners, already quartered there from the Union and the Anne de Bretagne, welcomed the newcomers cordially.

Our second division soon went aboard the Bellevue to man the steamer, but hardly were these men on board when again our alarm sounded. Luck was falling fast upon the Kronprinz; the sighted steamer gave evidence of being a prize.

To catch her was not to be so easy. She recognized us and put on all steam, pouring as much black smoke over her stern as if she were a destroyer making a smoke-screen.

Radio Battle
Raider's Operator Jumbles Victim's Calls

Meanwhile, she was using her wireless to call for help. Lieut. Brinkmann, who was waiting for this, at once began his powerful set, rendering the enemy's message unintelligible.

This wireless duel continued for an hour until the enemy surrendered.

The captured steamer bore the name Mont Agel. She was a trim, newly built vessel of about 5,000 tons. Our prize crew at once rowed over to her, to learn that the ship, which of all the ships had made the greatest effort to escape, was in ballast.

The transfer of luggage and crew to our decks at once began. By 1 p. m. everything of value was aboard. Our sea-cock crew accordingly opened the ship's cocks. The Mont Agel, however, sank slowly.

Accordingly, we rammed her amidships, first on the port, then on the starboard, each time with force enough to sink an ordinary ship. But the new vessel kept sturdily afloat.

Again we rammed her, this time in the stern and with such force that we tore a broad hole in her side through which the water rushed like a brook. So fast did she now sink that I had time to take only three pictures at intervals of a minute before she disappeared with a tremendous crash.

We put on all steam toward the Bellevue which, according to orders, had got under way and was slowly coming up.

That night we were doubly watchful for danger. We regarded these waters off the coast of Brazil as particularly perilous; at any moment we might expect to sight an Allied war vessel. To take no chances, Commander Thierfelder doubled the guard which stood at the guns all night ready for trouble.

President-elect Ortiz Rubio Plans Better Highway System for Mexico

new lands to returning Mexicans who have emigrated and to foreigners who fill the requirements of our laws.

We ought not, however, to base Mexican progress entirely on agriculture. The transformation of our raw materials should merit constant attention. It should not, however, be done in a hasty, protectionist manner which would injure the consumer.

Our truly national industries are certainly entitled to a temporary, moderate protection while they assure themselves of an independent existence. The most difficult question is how to establish the necessary equilibrium between capital and labor.

Labor Code
Will Seek to Give Protection to Workers

The efforts now under way to provide the nation with a general labor code with regulations designed for the best possible protection of the workers should be an important step in stabilizing national industry.

The political problem of the country is a question of co-ordination, efficiency and responsibility. We need to define clearly the relations between the Federation and the states not only in the administration and the economic field, but in the field of national politics. A similar point of view should exist between the cities and the states.

The existing institutions as well as those to come in Mexico require an organ of defense without which their normal functioning cannot be guaranteed.

The National Army constitutes this guarantee and a guarantee of our integrity as a sovereign nation. It should be the object of our special attention.

My relations with the countries of America will be most cordial. I shall work with all my force to help bring a better understanding all the way from Canada to Cape Horn.

My experience as a diplomat has made me opposed to jingoism or fanatical patriotism which always brings useless, empty results. The understanding between the countries of our continent should be based on mutual respect. To my mind nothing has done more to foster this than the Pan-American conferences held every five years.

The republics of America are strengthening themselves because their diplomats are creating a permanent instrument officially organized, through which they can be free to discuss the problems that interest them. One of the worthiest objects is to aid the younger nations to break away from hereditary prejudices.

This feeling has engendered in America a pacific idealism as can be seen in the outcome of the various conflicts which have occurred since the first conference in Washington, October 2, 1889.

Many Plans
Seek to Have Pleasant Relations With U. S.

It will be remembered that the second Pan-American conference was conducted October 22, 1901, in Mexico, and that before this session was closed the conference approved a resolution regarding sanitary police with the object of preventing spread of disease.

The law convoking the first Pan-American assembly in the United States specified the matter which would be dealt with. These included means to conserve the peace and foster prosperity in the American states, the establishment of a customs union, uniform weights and measures and definite plans for arbitration.

Another of the ideals of this congress was the construction of a Pan-American railway. Many of the countries are already bound together by rail lines and it was calculated that the railroad would extend a total of 11,900 miles from New York to Buenos Aires. Of this immense track 8,700 miles are now built.

Mexico is in the vanguard of Latin-America, and for this reason our relations with the United States should be on a basis of unquestioned integrity, dignity and noble understanding.

No one can deny that the American people are a fighting, vigorous race, whose achievements have placed them at the head of civilized nations. Our path should lead toward what will bring us closer together—Pan-Americanism.

If we want to have the friendship of America we must put aside jingoism as an indication of a lack of knowledge of geography, history and the social laws of the great American people.

To this end I would like to see a true Pan-American fraternity from Cape Horn to Canada.

One of the first acts of my administration will be to formulate for Mexico a general project for communication. It will have two purposes:

First, to establish communication services for towns which have no communications;

Second, to complete the junctions of communication lines already built, both highway and rail.

Every highway ought to be constructed well, because where the sub-structure is weak, the annual cost of upkeep is generally more than the cost of the best kind of road.

If we can open continually new sections of highway to places not yet reached by civilization, these towns will acquire a surprising business, industrial and agricultural animation.

Need Railroads
Lack of Communications Hampers Farmers

During my political campaign into the interior of Mexico I noted that many railway stations are established far from the populated centers. I believe that the layout of some of the railway stations was the result of favoritism on behalf of special interests. But it has been very bad for business expansion.

Another of the first efforts of my administration will be to establish communication by rail or roads between the southeast part of the country and the center.

The states of Tabasco, Campeche and Yucatan, which are marvelously rich agriculturally, have not been able to find a market for their products because of the lack of communications.

There should be a railway constructed to Pichuacalco, state of Chiapas, even though it would have to be built on bridges to cross the innumerable rivers of the section.

My government will also attempt to make our great rivers highways of communications. Pascual called rivers "roads that run."

The Pacific and Gulf ports of Mexico must also be united by rail lines or highways with the cities. Tonala asks a port; Progreso needs wharves worthy of the prestige of Yucatan; Campeche, envelope in a colonial atmosphere, can come to life only with the construction of immense quays.

In solving the problem of communication, we will have also effectively solved the problem of incorporating the Indians into civilization. This will be accomplished by means of a real contact which immediately brings improvement. Thus the Indians will lose that feeling of mistrust which wild people have always had toward the whites as legendary enemies of their race.

The Life of Pope Pius XI

THE FIRST AUTHORIZED BIOGRAPHY

By His Eminence, Cardinal Cerretti

Modernization of Vatican Library Inspired by His Earlier Work

'Pontiff's Generous Willingness To Help All Students an Outstanding Trait'

By HIS EMINENCE, BONAVENTURA CARDINAL CERRETTI,

Member of the Sacred College and for many years most intimate friend of Pope Pius XI.

IN the second instalment of his biography of Pope Pius XI, Cardinal Cerretti told of the notable service of the Pontiff—then Monsignor Ratti—in the famous Ambrosian Library in Milan. First as "doctor," then as Prefect, he spent 25 years in that repository of culture and learning until he was called to Rome to undertake even more notable work as Prefect of the historic Vatican Library.

In the accompanying instalment Cardinal Cerretti tells more of Monsignor Ratti's service as librarian, and the manifestation of this profound experience in the modernization and extension of the Vatican Library by Pope Pius since his accession to the Papal throne.

CHAPTER III.

WHAT pre-eminent characteristic made Achille Ratti so esteemed to all the world of high culture? It was a broad, intellectual munificence.

CARDINAL CERRETTI

Monsignor Ratti, prefect of the Ambrosian Library and then of the Vatican Library, did not alone consider himself a simple custodian of books, nor a scholar buried in his studies shut off from the outside world. He rather thought of his mission as that in which one must watch and help all the intellectual work that went on around him.

As his position placed him at the head of one of the most important centers of culture in the world, he always followed with a passionate love and with the greatest generosity the studious activities, the weary and the sometimes bitter and difficult researches which students of every country came to complete near him.

Further, he faithfully replied to all who wrote to him for advice and help. But, in addition to this generous willingness, on his own initiative, when passing through the halls of the library, he would approach those whom he saw studying and offer them assistance.

These were sometimes old men full of experience, who had already behind them long years of study in the intellectual realms; sometimes they were young men, only beginning, who seemed to feel lost and unable to choose among so many treasures. Monsignor Ratti would inquire about their studies and researches.

It is well known how, in general, students are jealous of the results of their own researches because they like to keep for themselves the merit of having arrived at results before others. Therefore, those who saw Achille Ratti were struck by his being so generous.

Among his most intimate friends and fellow workers his intellectual benevolence was even more pronounced.

Saved Files
Aided Friends by Supplying Much Data

He always collected the results of his studies and other notes and kept them in perfect order. Therefore, whenever he wanted to reward one of his fellow workers, or give special proof of his affection to one of his friends, he would get one of his files and, placing it in his friend's hands, would say: "This might be of use in this or that work," thereupon he would explain and illustrate the subject matter in these papers.

The librarian, Achille Ratti, never forgot, however, that he was a priest, and willingly took every opportunity which came to him in his work of exerting a religious and moral influence over those with whom he came in contact. Not that he was intolerant or fanatical. He was not intolerant because he scrupulously respected the convictions of others and was always ready to recognize the good faith of those who sincerely professed religious beliefs different from his own.

Good Influence
Was Excellent Example For Students

And the numerous connections which, as head of two such important scientific centers as the Ambrosian and Vatican Libraries, he had with so many non-Catholic students, marked all his activities with a singular discretion and temperance. Through this, at first sight; all could comprehend the depth and solidity of his priestly character, and at the same time could feel absolutely free from religious scruples in their relations with him.

With the Catholic students with whom he was in daily contact, he tried to exercise a good influence, both from the moral and religious points of view. When, as not infrequently happened, one of them, through these relations, renewed his spiritual life, Monsignor Achille Ratti would remark:

"I have succeeded in bringing this soul to God, and this I owe to the Ambrosian Library."

Library Head
Directs Work of Re-Cataloguing Books

The qualities of librarian continue to manifest themselves in the life of Achille Ratti. As Sovereign Pontiff, he is supreme arbiter of the Vatican Library.

Now, under his eye, the wealth of literature, history and science in the books, records and documents of that library have been re-catalogued according to the latest and most modern systems and technique.

In this way, the Vatican Library is second to none, not alone for its glorious history and the wealth of its contents, but also in its organization. In this great transformation, he has received the generous assistance of American benevolence, for when he asked for donations to accomplish this work, his request was met by a ready response from the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.

Some time ago Pope Pius was indeed overjoyed at the occasion to address the international convention of libraries, which he received in audience in the Sixtus the Fifth gallery. This section of the Vatican Library, on account of its antiquity, cannot be subjected to the severity of modern library systems.

They were surrounded with an example of an antique and classical library, the Pope said. And, even though antiquated in its operation and administration, it seemed great and venerable, especially as it was accompanied by that radiant, aesthetic form which smiled on them in such abundance.

Erect Statue
Beautiful Work of Art Honors Pontiff

He added that he was the more especially pleased to tell them, however, that near by, in the new buildings—the extension of the library—they could find all the latest improvements and everything that could be desired in a practical, modern library organization.

Achille Ratti, librarian, is already commemorated by famous monuments, both in the Ambrosian and Vatican Libraries. In the former a bronze statue of the Pontiff was unveiled three years ago.

It is a beautiful work of art by the well-known Italian sculptor, Enrico Quattrini, author of the statue of Cardinal Rampolla in the Church of St. Cecilia. It was placed in the great Hall of Consultation and shows the Pope sitting in an armchair, holding a book with one hand, and with the other making a sign as if asking for another book, which he appears to wish to consult.

Besides the statue, there are two mural inscriptions, one in the winter room at the very place where Achille Ratti sat for 25 years, and the other in the picture gallery, which is now called "Galleria Achilleа" in his honor.

Adds to Gift
Erects Building to House 250,000 Volumes

In the Vatican, though, there is not yet a specific monument to him, there is something far more significant and expressive than any statue in the improvements and extensions which have been completely under him.

Pope Pius XI, as a matter of fact, was not content with merely accepting the generous offer of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, which provided the means for the complete recataloguing of the library, but desired to add to this gift. Whereupon he built a new building capable of containing 250,000 volumes. The technical installation of this new extension was also a title of merit to American genius and industry, in that the work was executed by an American firm of experts under the personal supervision of the Pope.

These new buildings are equipped with the most up-to-date devices for lighting, heating and ventilating. And while these improvements were going on Pope Pius gave orders that a new approach to the buildings was to be constructed to make it easier for students and scholars to reach the library from the outside of the Vatican City, without passing through the numerous halls of the Vatican palaces.

Valuable Works
New Additions Also Stand As Monument

This approach entered the Belvedere courtyard directly into the library building and was constructed in the most exquisite architectural taste.

On the walls of this entrance two large inscriptions commemorate the improvements effected during the seven years of the Pontificate. One of these records that the libraries of Prince Ojino, Marquis Ferrajoli, Monsignor Petit and the Archbishop of Athens, who recently died; 340 Arab codes of the famous Carretti collections, the famous "Vercellone Bible," manuscripts, prints and 1,200 documents of various kinds have been added to the Vatican collections during this period.

These additions, in buildings, equipment and treasures, can certainly be considered the most glorious monument imaginable for an old librarian.

The profession of librarian is indeed rare among the successors of St. Peter. Only two in the long list of Popes have been keepers of the accumulated stores of knowledge. But neither attained the glory of Pius XI.

These were Nicholas V (Thomas Parentucelli of Sarzana, 1447-1455), and Marcel II (Marcel Cervini of Montepulciano, 1555), who reigned but 22 days.

COMMEMORATION—In Milan, Italy, is a bronze statue of Pope Pius XI commemorating his service of a quarter of a century in famous Ambrosian Library there. Above is a view of model for this statue, as sculptured by Enrico Quattrini in the latter's studio at the Vatican, and to which Cardinal Cerretti alludes in accompanying instalment.

SUPERVISION—Since he has become Supreme Pontiff, Pope Pius has surrounded the famous Vatican Library of which he was once Prefect, with many modern improvements, and made it more readily accessible to students and scholars of the world. Above is snapshot of Pope Pius and members of his official household during tour of inspection.

'Giant Planes Will Revolutionize Air Traffic in U. S.', Says Harris M. Hanshue

slightly adapted for passenger use.

In addition to inefficiencies in the planes themselves, their power plants were built to give a fairly high speed, for what might be termed a "sprinting distance," but normal cruising speed was very much below this. These planes were not economical. They were not, in reality, passenger planes at all.

I can illustrate the place of the big plane in the aviation picture through incidents in the history of Western Air Express, since that is the line I know best, and it is also a pioneer.

Were Pioneers
Only Fokker Would Undertake Order

We were, I think, first to demand the building of a real passenger plane. Two and a half years ago we asked manufacturers to bid on building us a plane which would do 120 miles an hour, carrying 2,500 to 3,000 pounds, have a cruising radius of five hours and a ceiling of 16,000 feet. Only Fokker would undertake to build such a ship.

At about the same time Harry F. Guggenheim, of the Guggenheim Fund for the Promotion of Aeronautics, called airline operators into conference regarding the granting of "equipment loans"—similar to those from which railways buy rolling stock—to an operator who would establish a "model" airline as a demonstration of efficiency.

That award was made to us, $150,000 loaned, and three Fokker F-10 planes purchased and put into operation between Los Angeles and San Francisco. The Guggenheim Fund also aided through establishment of a comprehensive meteorological service, at a cost of another $100,000. That experiment proved air transport, and demonstrated the economy of bigger and faster planes.

This Los Angeles-San Francisco route, incidentally, since has become the busiest route in the world. Including all companies operating, nine planes leave each way each day, and 100 persons per day has been the average travel since June 1. On our own line during 20 months only one plane turned back because of bad weather.

When that "model air line" was being established—that is to say, more than two years ago—we demanded of Fokker the designing and building of a bigger plane, having greater efficiencies, and outlined to him the general specifications and performance requirements. That demand brought the famous Fokker 32-passenger plane of today.

We knew then that the future of aviation depended on bigger planes. Let me deal in transportation terms for a minute and indicate why the big plane is necessary. For purposes of clear thinking, we reduce flight to transportation units; and we speak of "manufacturing transportation," and figure that in terms of unit costs.

Three and one-half years ago the most efficient thing in all aviation was the air mail. The operations' cost was $80 an hour. We "manufactured" transportation at the rate of 102,000 pound-miles per hour. That is to say we carried 1,000 pounds at the rate of 102 miles per hour.

Changes Made
Great Improvement Shown In the Planes

Today, by contrast, Fokker's "biggest land plane" can be operated—all phases of "overhead" included—for $130 an hour, it will carry 7,400 pounds at a 130-mile speed, and "manufacture transportation" at a cost of $130 for 962,000 pound-miles per hour.

Production has increased about nine times, whereas cost per hour has increased about 60 per cent. Considered in another way, the cost of manufacturing air transportation, using this 32-passenger plane, is only 18 per cent of the cost of manufacturing "pound-miles per hour" units with the best mail planes of three and one-half years ago.

Such a five-fold increase in efficiency is the thing upon which aviation builds and looks ahead, and these statistical figures illustrate what I said in the beginning, that achievement is based on mastery of penny-fractions.

Another factor almost as important as size is that a plane be capable of more constant operation. Someone estimated that transport planes the country over last year operated at little more than one and one-half hours per day. On our line between Los Angeles and Kansas City our planes have averaged nearly five hours per day. With bigger, faster planes, having longer range, the average of use should increase, thus distributing cost over a greater number of miles of useful performance.

With every reduction in cost of air transport the number of possible customers increased by progressive stages.

We have pegged down our belief in the big plane with an order of $550,000 for five Fokker 32-passenger planes for use on Western Air Express lines, the first of which should go into service between Los Angeles and San Francisco December 1.

If I point out that this plane has an operating speed of better than 130 miles an hour, and can be operated—including costs of selling transportation and all overhead—at $1 a mile, this may immediately raise a question as to whether air transport is not already on a cost basis comparable to the railway fare rate.

In theory if you fill a 32-passenger plane and dispatch it across country, costs work out at about 3½ cents per passenger mile. But no form of transportation operates at capacity. However, if we could hope to average operations at 40 per cent capacity loads—which would be high—then air travel in giant planes would at least be coming within range of competition with de luxe travel on the railways.

Great Distance
Plane May Span Continent in 24 Hours

Some such planes as this may span the continent in 24 hours. And with such a plane trans-Atlantic travel is at least a possibility, in 1,000-mile stages, via Labrador and Greenland; whether it is a probability remains to be seen.

Obviously, however, as operators we look forward to a day when, like the railroads, we will have a bedrock or foundation to build on in the form of heavy freight express business.

By removing passenger equipment from the big Fokker transport it is given a carrying capacity of 4½ tons, or 9,000 pounds. On this basis it would be entirely possible now to establish a $1 a pound transcontinental express rate, which unquestionably could be reduced to 75 cents later.

The first figure is six times the rail rate, to be sure, but as against five-day delivery by rail, an air line could accept a shipment at noon of one day in New York and deliver it in Los Angeles or San Francisco the following afternoon.

Increase Speed
Faster Planes Will Also Reduce Costs

In a year or so speed will have been stepped up to 150 miles an hour, reducing costs all along the line.

We dream of a ship which will do 200 miles an hour carrying a load of 10,000 pounds. That, I think, might permit us to carry express at a 37½ cent rate, using but one ship each way each day. With an increase in ships the rate might easily be 20 cents—as against 13½ cents by rail.

But then express, or passengers, would travel from New York to Chicago in 3½ hours, and from coast to coast in 12 to 13 hours.

Then, indeed, will we be "manufacturing transportation" economically, we will have something very important to sell, and we will be in competition with the railroads—able to quote transportation at railroad rates.

Aviation's need is for bigger, faster and more efficient planes.

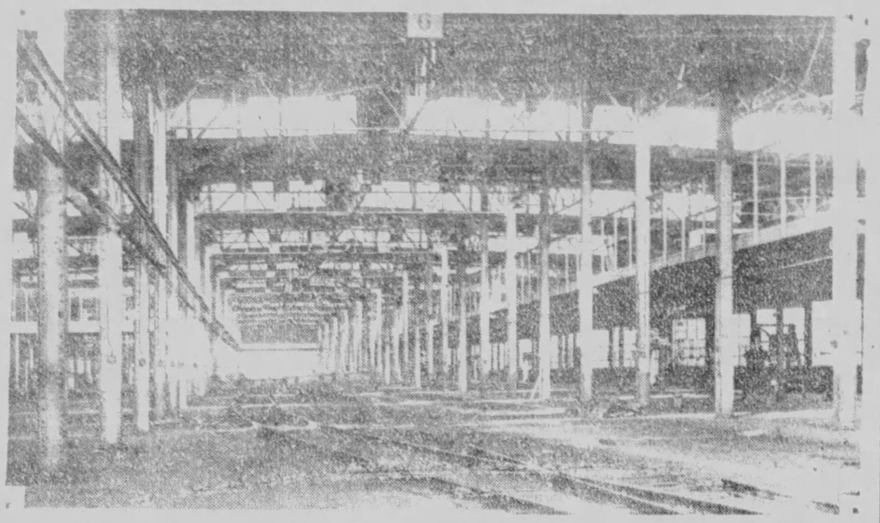
WHERE NEW AUSTIN WILL BE BUILT



ASSEMBLY PLANT—The above picture shows the interior of the Butler plant in which the new Austin motor cars will be built. Many weeks of work have been necessary to prepare the structure, which was used in the manufacture of Standard Eight motor cars a number of years ago, for the installation of machinery and assembly lines. Installation of the new equipment is expected to be under way late this winter. The new plant, which will have a capacity of about 1,000 cars a day, will provide employment for 3,000 men.

GULF OPENS NEW STATION

With the opening of another link in its extensive chain of service stations, at Twenty-second and Carson streets, the Gulf Refining Company has increased the opportunity afforded Pittsburgh motorists to conveniently obtain Gulf gasoline, Gulf No-Nox motor fuel, aviation grade; Gulf Supreme motor oil, and Gulfpride oil.

The architecture of the new Gulf station had been designed to fit into the surroundings and beautify, rather than disfigure, the location. It is a duplicate of hundreds of others built and operated for the service of motorists.

One of the notable features of the service offered is the positive action of all gasoline pumps. These pumps are tested daily, and unless they deliver full measure, are discontinued from service until repaired. Another service of the Gulf organization is the distribution of maps, through which travelers are informed as to roads and their condition.

Motorized Infantry Is Using Chevrolets

Motorization of infantry is being effected generally at this time in the armies of the world and the United States Army is conducting its first experiment along this line at Camp Eustis, Lee Hall, Va.

It is the Thirty-fourth Infantry that no longer has to hike with the slow military tread, riding instead in a fleet of 56 Chevrolet cars and trucks. Extensive maneuvers which have been conducted since last August have proved so successful that indications point to complete motorization of the Army within the next few years.

Lincoln Forecasts Future Aristocrat

NEW YORK, Nov. 30—The aristocratic automobile of tomorrow is forecast in 12 body types which seven of the country's leading coach builders have mounted on the Lincoln chassis for the automobile salon opening tomorrow in the Commodore Hotel.

A dash of the modernistic is among the advanced trends that custom coach masters have utilized in their creations for the Lincoln chassis, body innovations coupled with color combinations of unusal appeal in a variety of types from the sports car to the most formal of town cars.

HOW the ROADS ARE

One new detour is to be placed in effect and 11 others are to be removed, a bulletin from the State Highway Department states. The new detour:

Northumberland County, Route 14, between Watsontown and Milton, .13 mile earth, fair.

Detours to be removed:

Lawrence County, Route 956, between East Brook and Volant.

Susquehanna County, Route 267, St. Josephs to New York state line.

Wayne County, Belmont to Orson.

Lehigh County, Spinnerstown to Limeport.

Washington County, Route 88, between Speers and Charleroi.

McKean County, Route 219, between Lances Corners and Lewis Run.

Potter County, Route 607, between Austin and Oswayo.

Huntingdon County, Route 550, between Neelmont and Warriors Mark.

Fulton County, Route 522, between Needmore and Webster Mills.

Bucks County, Route 1, Hallsington to Morrisville.

Montgomery County, Traffic Route 102, Philadelphia to Edgehill.

Oiling operations have been curtailed for the season and will be resumed next spring with the opening of the construction season. However, maintenance forces will do patching and regular repair work which is on an extremely small scale and does not interfere with traffic.

ALONG AUTO ROW

by H. W. DIETRICH, Automobile Editor

Many New Features Expected in 1930 Lines of Cars

THE year 1930 looms as an eventful one for the automotive buying public.

The new year, according to reports from a number of the automotive manufacturing centers, will bring the greatest forward step toward the realization of the perfect motor car.

COMFORT, flexibility, power and beauty of line and appointments will find greater expression in the new cars. The first indication that the 1930 models will be more comfortable is had in the reports from Detroit that Ford will increase the wheelbase of his cars seven inches. This added length would make the Ford a 110 inch car, larger than six other popular makes of vehicles now on the market.

SPEAKING of length, the new year will bring to the auto markets a number of smaller cars. The new Austin, which is expected to have a wheelbase of from 75 to 80 inches, will make its appearance early next Spring. Production plans recently were announced for the Littlemac, an 80 inch car. Details of the Martin, a 60 inch vehicle, were announced this fall.

THE new Austin, which is to be built in Butler, will mark the return of the Pittsburgh district to the automobile manufacturing world. Production on that car is expected to begin late this winter in the plant that formerly was devoted to the production of the Stanard Eight, a V type car that was discontinued about seven years ago. A crew of men is now preparing the plant for installation of machinery and assembly lines.

Initial production of the Austin will be confined to two models, a coupe and a commercial car, according to C. A. Best, who recently was appointed general sales manager for the company. Mr. Best is a veteran of the industry with 16 years experience in sales and service. It also was announced that the initial capacity of the plant would be approximately 1,000 vehicles a nine-hour day. Employment for 3,000 will be provided at first.

THE trend toward eight-cylinder cars will continue into the new year. Several new eight-cylinder cars are expected to be announced during the automobile show season this winter. Tests of these cars are now being conducted in Detroit and at Ligonier, reports from Detroit say. A 16-cylinder car also will make its appearance next spring in a new special Cadillac.

AT least one new six-cylinder front drive car will make its appearance, according to reports from St. Louis. Several eight-cylinder front drives also will be added to this field.

Reports from Detroit and other manufacturing cities indicate, among other trends, a tendency toward adoption of a four-speed gearset or transmission. There also is a tendency toward adoption of a three-speed gearset with a silent second speed.

PITTSBURGH is continuing its heavy increase in the number of new car registrations. Official figures for October show an increase of 21 per cent over the same month last year. The increase for the first 10 months over a similar period for last year is 37 per cent.

Figures from 20 principal cities show the Pittsburgh percentage of increase to have been exceeded by the percentages of increase of only one other city. Of the 20 cities, 12 showed a decrease in October percentage, and eight an increase.

COLORS PROHIBITED

In China red as a body color for automobiles is prohibited because of religious significance, and in Spain blue is prohibited because it is the color of the royal family.

A.M.A. INDORSES ROAD PROGRAM

"Legislation providing for the construction of improved highways across unreserved public lands, non-taxed Indian lands and other government reservations, thus connecting up the federal-aid highway system of the United States, received the indorsement of the legislative committee of the American Motorists' Association in Washington," states C. H. Roth, secretary of the Pittsburgh Motor Club and vice president of the A. M. A.

CROSSES U. S. IN 69 HOURS

In the most outstanding transcontinental record breaking run ever made by an automobile, a Franklin sedan clipped 4 hours and 29 minutes off the former record, which also was held by Franklin, covering the 3,260 miles between New York City and Los Angeles on the Pacific coast in 69 hours and 31 minutes. This new mark beats a former record held by another car by 8 hours and 9 minutes. Cannonball Baker, chief test pilot for Franklin, was behind the wheel of the air-cooled car, which has added a new outstanding record to its already long list of major records.

In this new record run the Franklin beat the time of the fastest trains by 8 hours and 29 minutes and made a highly favorable showing with the combination train and airplane time of 48 hours.

Baker was checked out of New York by Western Union timers on Monday night at 8:30 and arrived in Los Angeles at 3:01 p. m. Wednesday, averaging 46.89 miles an hour for the trip. Not for an instant during the terrific grind which carried the Franklin over the greatest mountain ranges in America as well as across the plains, deserts of the Far West and through crowded city traffic, was the engine stopped. In all kinds of weather, including rain, wind, snow and below zero temperatures, the air-cooled engine developed the great power necessary to sweep the Franklin to another record for fast trans-continental travel.

Auburn November Sales Show Gain

Total volume of sales of Auburn for the first 15 days of November shows an increase of 31.6 per cent over the same period last year, E. L. Cord, president, announced Saturday. Total volume of sales of Auburn for the 11 months ending October 31 show an increase of 77.9 per cent over the preceding period.

U. S. BUSINESS SOUND—NASH

KENOSHA, Wis., Nov. 30.—Another outstanding American industrial leader today contributed further encouragement to the nation in the way of his expressed conviction that general business conditions were on a most sound footing.

G. W. Nash, president of Nash Motors Company, in a personal letter to the Nash dealer organization, which will reach approximately 12,000 Nash dealers and salesmen throughout the country, stated:

"There is nothing wrong with general business conditions in our country.

"Now that some parts of the country are sobering up from the effects of their stock market intoxication, it might not be amiss to pause for a moment and take stock of ourselves and of general business condition.

"I never have known a time when general business conditions were on a more sound footing than at the present time. The country has been blessed with a bountiful harvest; prices of farm products are at a very satisfactory point; stock has done exceptionally well and has brought a splendid price. Other commodities coming from the ground, such as copper, iron, etc., are at a very good price. What more could you expect?

"The history of the American people is that when they have money they spend it. Our monetary situation never was in better shape during my lifetime. There is no shortage of money; the banks are loaded with cash. The indications are that we are going to have cheaper money in 1930 than in 1929; and just the moment those who have been intoxicated with speculation are sufficiently sobered up, you will find that business will go along about in a normal way."

The moto[illegible]ter registers the temperature of the water in the header of the radiator. If the water in the system is low, it may not reach the header. Therefore, its temperature will not be registered.

Gears of New Car Difficult to Shift

Sw[illegible]g from an old car to a new one, motorist may question that [illegible]ars in the latter may be shifted more easily. He will find the question answered negatively, however, if he will but recognize that there may be a considerable difference in the speeds of the engines of the two cars. MYSTERY CAR WINS TRIALS ON LIGONIER HILL

Small Unnamed Eight Shows Speed in Mountain Tests—Will Be Announced Soon

By RAY PRIEST,

Staff Correspondent Universal Service and Sun-Telegraph.

LIGONIER, Pa., Nov. 30.—This quiet little Allegheny town today is the scene of the making of another chapter in the history of the automobile industry.

Its residents have taken on an air of suppressed excitement. They don't profess to know what it's all about. They do know that the beautiful new automobiles that day and night are grinding out mile after mile along the mountainous highways in the immediate neighborhood are accomplishing something of moment in the automobile world.

And they also know that the smallest of the cars of an entirely different style than they ever saw and bearing no marks of identification, is daily winning all of the acceleration tests, speed tests, hill climbing contests and other performance events that are staged hour after hour by expert drivers and mechanics.

SMALLEST MOTOR

Once in a while, when the hoods are lifted to tune up the engine beneath, those standing beside the road see that all of the cars climbing the hill have eight-cylinder motors, and having seen them they know that the car without any identification—the mystery car—has the smallest motor of all.

Three of the cars being tested are makes well-known to the watchers; they are popular makes of excellent reputation in the $1,500 to $3,500 selling class. Every time the mystery eight beats one of its larger brothers they cheer. The word has leaked out that the mystery car will soon be offered the public at a price around $1,000.

BIG FIRM SPONSOR

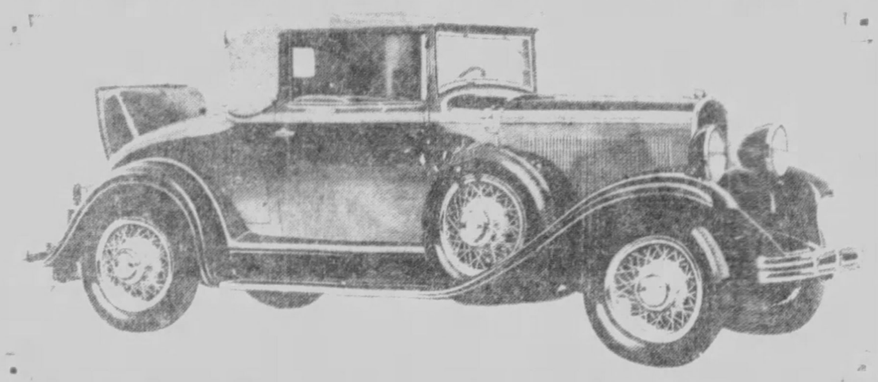
The mystery car is a product of the genius of the staff of engineers of one of the larger automobile manufacturers. It is entirely new in design. Start of production will come with the notification from here of satisfactory results in the tests with the larger eight-cylinder cars on Ligonier Mountain. Most of the competitive tests are being made on the highway that runs straight up the side of this peak in the Laurel Ridge of the Alleghenies.

The highway on the side that is used for the testing is a hard surfaced roadway, fairly straight and very steep for its entire distance of three and seven-eighths miles. The elevation above sea level at the start of the climb is 1,200 feet and at the top you are 2,600 feet in the air.

Tests were made to learn if the mathematically computed torque and the brake horsepower would prove out in actual operation. When the cars failed too badly the mechanics would be set to work turning them to a better condition.

Comparative tests were made in the first, second and high gears. Other comparisons were made in acceleration. Often to relieve the monotony of the fine trials, actual races between two cars would be staged.

NEWEST OF CONVERTIBLE TYPES



SEVENTH OF LINE—This convertible coupe recently was added to the Chrysler "70" line of cars, of which there are six other models. It is long, low and graceful, with smart body lines suggestive of the custom creation. The top, of gray Burbank, fits closely to the body. When lowered it gives the car the appearance of a fleet roadster and when up, that of a dignified coupe.

FEDERAL ROAD CONFAB JAN. 11

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30.—Plans are being rapidly formulated for the greatest highway conference ever held in the United States, which leads the world in improved roads.

The twenty-seventh annual convention of the American Road Builders' Association, which is to be held January 11-18 in Atlantic City, is expected to attract the greatest number of persons interested in road building ever to be gathered together. The record of 30,000 attendance at previous conventions is expected by officials to be broken this year.

The convention setting will be the annual road show, which will bring several hundred carloads of machinery and equipment to fill the Atlantic City auditorium, the largest in the world.

Polishing Does Not Wear Out Finish

Often when a person polishes his automobile, he finds that the color seems to come off the Duco finish. The Duco Information Service states that this does not appreciably shorten the life of the car finish. The service says:

"When Duco becomes weathered through frequent exposure to the sun and other elements, a slow erosion takes place, releasing microscopic pigment particles. When the surface is polished, the small pigment particles are transferred to the polishing cloth, thereby staining the cloth the color of the Duco. However, this should not alarm the car owner, as the amount of Duco he is removing is negligible."

Engineers, Owners Face Brake Problem

The fact that some self-energizing brakes, although they compensate for it in another way, are prone to cause drum scoring, has given automotive engineers a problem. It is a problem for the car owner, too. He should recognize the possibility of the drums being out of round when he figures the car needs a brake relining.

Pierpoint Reduces Pittsburgh Prices On Hudson-Essex

Prices are reduced on Hudson and Essex cars in this city, announces J. R. Pierpoint, distributor of Hudson-Essex in Western Pennsylvania.

"This action is in anticipation of new models," says Mr. Pierpoint, "and it offers to local motorists a buying opportunity at terms which save them from $105 to $657," he declared.

"This is purely a local event," he declared. "Factory prices remain the same on these cars. In addition to the reduction in prices, we have so arranged our financial terms that the motorist can obtain these cars at only a very few dollars a month more than for lower priced cars. And if the buyer prefers we will store his new car until spring."

Veterans Dominate Packard Personnel

Two out of every three Packard cars are sold and serviced under the direction of men who have been with the Packard Motor Car Company 10 years or more and whose average length of service with the company is 16½ years, says a Packard news bulletin. They constitute more than one-third of the distributors of the company. More than half of the total number of cars made by Packard are handled by men who have been with the company an average of 21 years.

An interesting fact in connection with the personnel of the Packard factories is that two-thirds of the foremen in the shops have service records of more than 10 years and 20 per cent of all the foremen have been with the company for 20 years or longer. Only 13 per cent of the foremen have been with Packard less than five years and of this number one-half are now finishing their fifth year.

Concrete Replacing Old Wooden Bridge

The last of the famous covered bridges on the Susquehanna Trail, the concrete road between Niagara Falls and Washington, at Tioga, Pa., was recently ordered replaced by a new concrete bridge.

CHRYSLER '70' SPORT COUPE

The addition of a convertible coupe on the Chrysler "70" chassis was announced today by Howard Samson, of Samson Motor Company, Chrysler distributor here.

With this model now in production, the line includes seven body styles.

The new Chrysler is long, low and graceful with smart body lines. It is a dignified coupe with the top up, and with the top lowered has the appearance and dash of the fleet roadster.

The radiator is high and wide and enhances the impressiveness of the frontal area, where the vertical-ventilating shutters contrast vividly with the chrome-plated radiator shell, bowl-shaped headlamps and other bright work. The hood is distinguished further by the parking lamps, joined by a band of chromium across the cowl. The hood appears longer than it actually is because of the subtle effect produced by the narrow vertical louvers on the sides. The entire length of the car is emphasized by sweeping curves and stream-lining, the gracefully contoured rear deck reflecting the arcs of the fenders.

NAME MURDOCH TO SALES POST

J. E. Murdoch, promotional sales manager, has been appointed wholesale manager of the Pierpoint Motor Company, distributor of Hudson and Essex motor cars, in charge of all wholesale operations. Announcement of Mr. Murdoch's appointment was made Saturday by J. R. Pierpoint president. He will assume his new duties Monday.

Mr. Murdoch's assignment marks another step in the expansion of Hudson and Essex activities in Western Pennsylvania. This expansion movement, which began with the appointment of Mr. Pierpoint to the distributorship in Western Pennsylvania about six years ago, recently was climaxed with the addition of 11 counties to the Pierpoint territory. The Pittsburgh distributor now represents the Hudson organization in 43 counties in the western part of Pennsylvania.

National attention was recently focused on the Pierpoint sales and dealer organization when it won the Hudson-Essex trophy for the greatest sales record in the national organization. Mr. Murdoch, as promotional sales manager, was instrumental in aiding the Pittsburgh group achieve the record.

The new Pierpoint wholesale manager is a veteran of 15 years' service in the automobile industry. He came to Pittsburgh from Philadelphia with Mr. Pierpoint six years ago. He also will continue in charge of the sales promotion office.

Auto Race Driver Now Selling Stutz

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Nov. 30.—Jules Ellingboe, famous for years as an automobile race pilot, and one time associated with Stutz, has rejoined the factory sales force of that company as district manager, announces C. Alfred Campbell, sales development manager of the Stutz Motor Car Company of America. Ellingboe is best remembered by his sensational drive in the 1927 Indianapolis classic, when he pushed his front-drive Cooper special from twenty-first to fifth position in twenty-two laps. In this same race, his car figured in a spectacular wreck and Ellingboe sustained injuries which put him out of the racing game for some time.

Winter Gasoline Must Vaporize Fast

Motorists who have trouble starting their cars on cold winter mornings probably do not know the why of such exasperating moments, says a local official of the Gulf Refining Company. For quick starting there must be a quick and complete vaporization of the gasoline in the combustion chamber. And because, continued the Gulf officials, all gasolines are not volatile to this extent, winter gasolines must be selected with care.

The quality of gasoline is judged by initial boiling point and end or dry point, which governs the vaporization of the fuel. With 100 degrees Fahrenheit initial and 374 degress Fahrenheit end or dry point there is perfect vaporization. It is this quality which has made Gulf No-Nox the popular winter fuel, continued the Gulf statement.

WINCHESTER S. A. E. SPEAKER

Winchester, general superintendent of motor equipment, Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, Friday will address the Pittsburgh Section, Society of Automotive Engineers, on "Fleet Maintenance, Shop and Field." The meeting will be held in the William Penn Hotel and will be preceded by a dinner at 6:30 p. m.

DRIVER AIDS ENGINE

An experienced driver never takes the laboring of the engine as a cue to shift to a lower gear on a hill, but shifts before the engine begins to labor.

FRENCH BREAK SPEED RECORDS

All records for sustained speed previously held by American cars were shattered on the Montlhery track near Paris, France, when Marchant, Morel, Kindoff and Leon DePrasale drove their 12-cylinder sleeve-valve Voisin 30,000 kilometers in 224 hours, 39 minutes, 13 seconds for an average speed of 82.97 miles an hour.

The engine of the Voisin is the same type used in all Willys-Knight cars built by the Willys-Overland Company, the largest manufacturer of cars employing sleeve-valve engines.

'Abolish War, Assure Food Ships' Safety'

been vanquished. The chemist has killed the jurist.

How, then, can we hope women and children will be succored as President Hoover so nobly requests, if these defenseless creatures are again to be fired on by cannon, or airplanes, or poisoned by gas? In a war of such ferocity, food-stuffs become weapons. As the Daily Telegraph observed, grain and oil serve to manufacture munitions cereals can be utilized for the manufacture of industrial alcohol.

As soon as the struggle becomes widespread, everything becomes the tool for carrying on war. Taught by recent events, we do not think, we democratic, peace-loving French, that this barbarism can be maintained and its hideous companion, the blockade, be outlawed. The two scourges must be destroyed together or the work will be in vain.

According to the Daily Herald, the English Naval League has already voted and conveyed to various members of Parliament an oath declaring "That liberty accorded to members in time of war would result in the prolongation of hostilities and to the multiplication of losses in human life."

The Daily Chronicle observes coldly that should the United States refuse to associate itself with any program of sanctions in the case of a people guilty of provoking a conflict the League of Nations would have some difficulty in renouncing the economic weapon that is the sole means at its disposal for insuring peace. Another argument; if the introduction of foodstuffs is to be permitted by way of sea, it would necessarily be compulsory to tolerate it as well by way of land.

In the Daily News, M. J. A. Spender admits that the proposition of Mr. Hoover may in certain cases be useful to Great Britain for her own subsistence, but he forcefully establishes the fact that the feeding of women and children presents itself only as a particular case of the problem of protection of noncombatants.

I share very decidedly such a logical and clear opinion. I approve also the declaration of the Morning Post that "When open cities are bombarded how can one be certain that women and children will not suffer? Since it is permissible to kill them and cut them into a thousand pieces, is it necessary to ask that we should not reduce them to starvation?"

Let me recapitulate and conclude as strongly as possible. Blockade is an odious and barbarous measure, but no more odious and barbarous than other procedures of war. To the mind capable of philosophic conceptions, it seems on the whole in its most recent form simply the traditional tactics of isolating a city, an intrenched camp or a post. One might say a will superior to the human will and intent upon protecting us against this scourge, wanted it first to exhaust itself in the perpetration of horrors.

Blockade has sometimes respected women and children and neutrals. It has occasionally disregarded everything not connected with the struggle itself. Yet we still try to humanize it. That was the object of the celebrated Declaration of Paris on April 16, 1856. Certain newspapers like the Daily Herald maintain that Hoover would like merely to return to that document. To what end? We saw during the last war what happened to that diplomatic charter.

Turning then respectfully to President Hoover, since he desired to solicit widespread opinion, I shall express the opinion of Democrat Frenchmen, "Mr. President, we condemn blockade. We understand the grandeur of your idea. We think that no man on earth, after the recent services rendered by you to the unfortunate French and Belgian populations, has more authority than you to express himself on this subject.

"Moreover, we understand that the United States wants to assure its international commerce of the freedom to which it has the right. But after the terrible deception we have undergone, and convinced that another struggle would again be world-wide, we do not think war can be regulated or that law can humanize it.

"To destroy the hideous blockade we must destroy war itself. We must base our efforts on the Kellogg Pact and organize an international system of protection. We take the liberty of saying to you, Mr. President, that according us moral sanctions will not suffice. Only the most highly civilized nations are concerned with them. Nations animated by an imperialistic spirit or even by inflammatory caprices would be indifferent to them. The weakness of merely moral sanctions is its tendency to force justice to befriend iniquity.

"Mr. President, we are anxious in so far as we are able, to help you in delivering the United States from the obsession of blockade. Help us by uniting your practical efforts at organization with ours. You who can do so much—help us by delivering us from the spectre of war. That is the only solution."

The adoption of Screen Grid by outstanding radio manufacturers establishes its superiority over old style tube sets. Manufacturers contemplating new models are coming to screen grid. It has revolutionized the industry. But—don't be fooled. A screen grid tube doesn't make a screen grid circuit—nor do several of them.

Atwater Kent screen grid radio is a real screen grid circuit—embodying all the latest known improvements—taking advantage of 100 per cent efficiency of every integral part. Its performance will quickly demonstrate its superiority far better than mere words. No additional improvements known to radio can increase the high degree of its perfection. It is a set that will be "modern" for years to come. It is a challenge to other manufacturers to equal its performance.

The air is full of wonderful things you should not miss—an Atwater Kent radio doesn't miss anything.

It never fails you. If a station is on the air and your neighbor can get it, you can get it just a little bit better on an Atwater Kent Screen Grid. And you'll get stations your neighbor can't get, and bring them in clearly with the beautiful natural tone characteristic of the Atwater Kent Electro-Dynamic Speaker. Until you've had the thrill of getting station after station, with slight turns of the dial—until you've had the pleasure of listening to a real musical instrument whose reproduction is as naturally perfect as science can make it—until you've had the excitement of far distant station announcements—you've missed something in radio. A demonstration will convince you that an Atwater Kent Screen Grid Set is the ultimate in Radio.

DILWORTH THANKS PITTSBURGHERS FOR WELFARE FUND AID

STATE PRISON REFORM ASKED; ASHE PRAISED

Rockview Farm Held Model Institution by National Penal Society in Report.

Prison conditions in Pennsylvania are declared to necessitate important reforms, according to a survey of various state penal and reformatory institutions conducted by the National Society of Penal Information, Inc. Conflicting authority is pointed out as the reason for ineffectiveness in Pennsylvania's prison system.

At the same time high recommendation is given by the penal society for the policies of Warden Stanley P. Ashe, of the Western State Penitentiary at Pittsburgh, and the prison farm at Rockview is regarded as a model for the entire country in providing constructive employment for convicts.

The results of investigations by the National Society of Penal Information are set forth in the Handbook of American Prisons and Reformatories which soon will be published and follows the action of Hearst newspapers in calling attention to jail deliveries, riots and other outrages which are traced directly to idleness and demoralizing conditions in the prisons.

LACK OF EMPLOYMENT

"Evidences of the defectiveness of the Pennsylvania organization has continued to accumulate," says the Handbook, "and it has not only been productive of friction and clashes of authority, but, even where the State Welfare Department has complete power, it has failed to provide employment for a substantial percentage of the prison population.

"For example, recent figures show that out of a total prison population of 1,552 at Eastern Penitentiary only 311 men found employment in the Department of Welfare shops.

"In several states there is a marked tendency to centralization. Pennsylvania has either gone too far in centralization or not far enough. A complete centralization of the prisons of the state should be effected or else there should be a complete decentralization."

While prison officials here declare that many improvements are required before their ideas can be effectively carried out, the work among criminals in Pennsylvania is nevertheless attracting national attention and experiments are being watched by criminologists with a view of recommendation to succeeding Congresses for prison reform.

CALIFORNIA MOVEMENT

William Randolph Hearst, in a letter recently to California prison authorities, praised the effort which is being made in that state to take certain of the convicts from the walled prisons during the day and give them work in agriculture. In California it is expected that provision can be made to provide constructive employment for all prisoners, and that the introduction of this sys-

T. H. M'KNIGHT LEAVES P. R. R.

Today marks the retirement of T. H. B. McKnight, of Pittsburgh, former treasurer of the Pennsylvania Lines, West, who, yesterday, completed more than 52 years of railroad service. At the time of his retirement McKnight was vice president of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company and the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis Railroad Company, subsidiaries of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

McKnight, 70, entered employ of the railroad in 1877, after graduating from Western University of Pennsylvania. He began his railroad service in the office of the second vice president and treasurer at Pittsburgh, and in May, 1891, became treasurer of the Lines, West. In 1925, he relinquished his duties as treasurer to devote his entire time to the various western subsidiaries of the system.

The veteran railroad official is a trustee of the Dollar Savings Bank of Pittsburgh and the University of Pittsburgh. He also is a director of the Monongahela National Bank and the Peoples Savings and Trust Company of Pittsburgh.

SCIENTISTS IN TALKIES HERE

An innovation in public lectures will be started Tuesday night when four internationally-known scientists and educators speak from the sound screen at Carnegie Institute.

The program is being presented by Tech through the courtesy of the General Electric Company.

The speakers who will be heard via talking pictures, are Sir Oliver Lodge, English scientist, who will describe "Action of Forces in Space;" Sir Ernest Rutherford, president of the Royal Society, London, on "Constitution and Transformation of the Elements;" Sir William Bragg, director of the Davy Faraday Research Laboratory, London, on "Arrangement of Atoms and Molecules in Crystals;" and Dr. C. W. Hewlett, research physicist of the General Electric Laboratories, on "Radio-Active Rays."

Should the idea prove successful from a local standpoint it is highly probable, the Institute has announced, that the regular series of public lectures offered yearly may be augmented by talking pictures. The lectures Tuesday will begin at 8:30 p. m. in Room 218, Engineering Hall.

Famous Race Track May Become Park

LONDON, O., Nov. 30.—(AP.)—The famous Pastime Park, in Plain City, which has one of the best known half-mile race tracks in this section, may be annexed by Plain City, it is reported. The park recently was saved from public sale by action of the citizens in raising money for the purchase of the park.

A petition has been filed asking for annexation on the ground that the park now actually is owned by the town. The site contains 15.92 acres. Hearing on the petition has been set for December 23.

Plain City is half in Union and half in Madison Counties. The park is on the Union County side.

Former Film Star Files Third Suit for Divorce

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 30.—Following the old proverb of "If at first you don't succeed," Claire Anderson, former picture actress, is going to make another try at untangling her matrimonial affairs.

Through her attorney, LeRoy Reames, she has filed suit for divorce from Harry H. Anderson, automobile man, charging simple desertion.

For four years Mrs. Anderson has been trying to unravel the tangled skein of matrimony which enveloped her. In 1925 she filed her first suit for divorce, naming Mrs. Edna Schwab and Mrs. Wilma Adams. That was dropped.

Two years after she tried again. This time she charged Florence Omley, another actress, was responsible for her alleged broken home and filed a $100,000 damage action against Miss Omley. This was pending for 17 months and then canceled along with the divorce proceedings.

But this third and last—maybe—time there will be no fond reconciliation, Mrs. Anderson declares. She is "through," she says.

Wheeling Creek Stocked With Bass

WHEELING, W. Va., Nov. 30.—(AP.)—More than 1,000 large mouth black bass, ranging in size from fingerlings to specimens weighing over four pounds, were placed in Wheeling Creek by the Ohio County chapter of the West Virginia Wild Life League. The fish were seined from the lake at Rock Springs Park, Chester, W. Va.

Ministers Violate Auto Laws Oftenest

BOSTON, Nov. 30.—Members of the clergy were asserted to be the "worst violators of the motor vehicle laws in the commonwealth" by George A. Parker, registrar of motor vehicles, tonight.

Parker, speaking at an open forum at the Y. M. C. A., ranked doctors second and traveling salesmen third.

'Death Valley' Scott Enters Radio Field

Scott said he would hire the best talent available and would allow no advertising to be broadcast. The station will cost about $400,000, he said.

STATE TO BUILD 1,100 MILES OF NEW HIGHWAYS

Pennsylvania Joins National Urge for Speeding Up Construction During 1930.

HARRISBURG, Nov. 30.—(AP.)—In line with the nation-wide urge for speeding up construction work, the road program mapped out for next year by the Department of Highways calls for the greatest highway improvement in the history of Pennsylvania.

The department expects to have construction of projects totaling 1,100 miles of new highways and replacements under way next year, of which 900 miles are expected to be completed, according to W. A. Van Duzer, assistant chief engineer.

The previous seasonal record is 784 miles, established in 1925.

Thus far this year 518 miles of new roads and replacements have been built by contractors for the department with 789 miles under contract.

The total road construction for the year including the 161 miles laid down by the department's own forces is 679. By the end of the year the total is expected to go over 700 miles.

Before the end of the year, Van Duzer said, 900 miles will have been placed under contract.

LET CONTRACTS SOON

The contemplated construction of 900 miles next year is to be done by contract and does not include the stretches paved by the department on its own behalf.

A total of 800 miles had been set as the goal for this season, but the actual construction will fall short of that mark because of a late start in letting contracts. Because of a shortage of funds before being granted the extra cent of gasoline tax by the last Legislature, the department, the assistant engineer said, was compelled to restrict its letting of bids to 75 miles prior to May 1.

Inasmuch as the motor funds are made available for two-year periods, the work of advertising for bids and awarding contracts will continue throughout the winter so that most of the actual work can be started by May. To be completed within a single season it is usually necessary to start construction on a project before or during the month of May.

Among the work to be done next year will be the paving of the last two unimproved gaps in the primary highway system. They are between Lock Haven and Hyner and a stretch south of Mauch Chunk and comprise only 30 miles.

PUSH BRIDGE WORK

Another important improvement project placed tentatively on the 1930 program is the widening and reduction in grade and curve of the two subways carrying the Lincoln highway under the Pennsylvania Railroad's rights-of-way at Malvern, near Philadelphia.

Negotiations for the improvement of the underpasses have been in progress for some time and Van Duzer believes the work will get under way during the next year. A part of the improvement is the widening of the road under the tracks to four-car width.

In addition to the other work, the department will make a real start in rebuilding county bridges, which will all become state property on June 1, next.

Contracts for replacement of 70 of the structures were let this year with 250 more on the program for 1930.

Carnegie Tech Paper Proposes 'Date Bureau'

A "DATE BUREAU" to serve the need for companionship among men and girl students at Carnegie Tech, is suggested by an article in the current issue of The Tartan, student weekly publication.

All students would be classified in a directory along with the telephone number, address and a picture of the prospective "victim," it is suggested.

Good dancers would be printed in red letters. Names of girls content with a balcony seat in the movies would be similarly marked. One's height would be given. When the "victim" would be engaged or "out of circulation," he or she would be so marked in the book.

Those using the "service" would be required to report their experiences and opinions so that applicants in the future would be able to benefit by experiences of "those who have gone before."

WOMEN STUDY FOR MEN'S JOBS

Whereas, the earned income of an individual is derived from his labor and creative faculties, which are subject to rigid limitations, fluctuations and serious depreciation, while the income from property is a permanent and stable income, it seems inequitable to tax earned incomes on the same basis as incomes from property and invested capital without taking depreciation into consideration; and

CHARITY FUND GOAL TOPPED AS DRIVE ENDS

Money Pours in While Workers Tabulate Results; Books Still Open.

Pittsburgh's liberality in oversubscribing its Welfare Fund and assuring another year in the successful community financing of 31 of its leading philanthropics called forth expressions of gratitude Saturday from Joseph Dilworth, general chairman of the second annual canvass for the needy and the continuing of social work in Allegheny County.

"The people have given whole-hearted indorsement to the Welfare Fund," said Mr. Dilworth, "and by their generous donations have expressed their faith in the community movement. In the number of subscribers to the fund as well as in the volume of contribution our totals exceed those of last year. In thanking the public for its support I cannot say too much in praise of the 7,000 faithful workers who stood alongside of the campaign committee and brought about the achievement of practical results.

FUND OVERSUBSCRIBED

The first tabulation on Saturday showed a total of 61,652 subscriptions and a total of $1,170,039.52. More money is coming in. In the house-to-house canvass final reports cannot be closed until this week. The receipts overtop the 1930 budget by more than $2,000. This sum will be increased when all the money is in. The oversubscription, if not required to meet an emergency during the coming year, will result in a relatively lower budget in 1931.

The reports from the boroughs and townships to date are as follows: Upper St. Clair Township, $635; Oakdale, $561; McKeesport, $525; Freeport, $330; Brentwood, $524; Bellevue, $2,842; Ingram, $1,209; Edgewood, $4,030; Chesswick, $709; Etna, $735; Dormont, $2,211; Thornburg, $977; Crafton, $2,375; Pitcairn, $867; Bethel, $646; Hampton Township, $662; Oakmont, $2,001; Ben Avon, $2,923; Rosslyn Farms, $1,308; Verona, $778; Coraopolis, $515; Mt. Lebanon, $3,446; Avalon, $595; Braddock, East Pittsburgh and Rankin, $2,300; miscellaneous, $457.

In the final totals given below the fractional amounts under $1 have not been carried out in the published team reports, which explains why the column totals are slightly higher than shown in addition to the units for each team. The report follows:

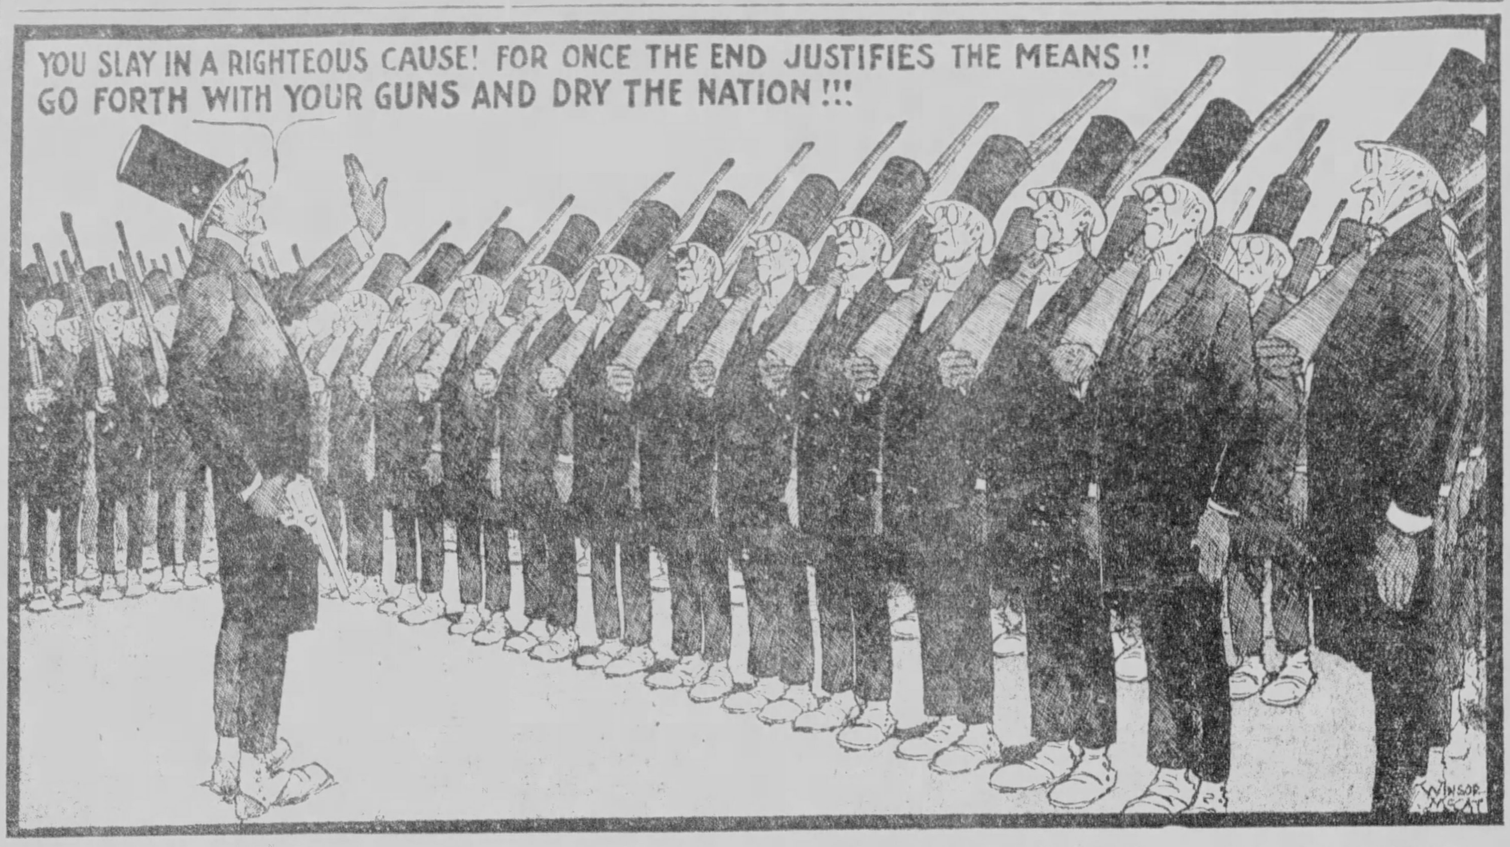
SHOTGUN PROHIBITION

Copyright, 1929, by N. Y. American, Inc.



"ARDENT prohibitionists, without any official standing whatsoever, have taken it upon themselves to enforce the law!"

So reads, in part, an interesting booklet put forth by the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment charging that killings by Prohibition Enforcers have benn "SUPPRESSED" by the Powers-That-Be at Washington.

"REFORMING AMERICA WITH A SHOTGUN" is the title of the pamphlet.

On the authority of United States Senator Tydings, of Maryland, it lists fifty-one specific "Enforcement" slayings that are NOT recorded in the files of the Prohibition Department.

Two hundred and sixty-three "Enforcement" killings are officially recorded at Washington, while an honest report, the pamphlet charges, "WOULD LIST MORE THAN 1,000."

The list compiled by the Washington Herald shows 1,360 deaths.

The artist senses the spirit of the FANATICAL, INTOLERANT Dry Drive to jam total abstinence down the Nation's throat.

Look again at the cartoon. Instead of moderation—TEMPERANCE BY EDUCATION—on every hand, we behold ardent drys, forgetting for the nonce that the end never justifies the means, "Saying it with Shotguns."

The Sun-Telegraph will publish each Sunday, until completed, the full list of killings due to "Shotgun Prohibition." Every state in the Union is included in the list. Names and dates of the killings will be listed as they are in today's installment.

Vienna Dominates Pittsburgh in Art During the Past Week

BY ELEANOR REID

VIENNA dominated Pittsburgh art circles in recent days past. Leo Katz was enthusiastically received at the initial lecture of the series on the Carnegie International exhibition. Another honor Viennawards was the purchase for the permanent collection at Carnegie Institute of "Two Ships" by Karl Sterrer. The immediately subsequent visit to Vienoise was the completion of the portrait of Penelope Noonan by Victor Hammer.

Hammer, known to Pittsburgh through his representation in Carnegie international exhibitions, presents a striking study of Miss Kindred. In it he has been successful with the difficult problem of painting white on white. He has transferred the subject's delicate beauty of life into the spirituality of paint.

Penelope Reed

Victor Hammer's method of reflecting the transition from life to art is logical. He determines the characteristic expression of the subject through chief inclinations of the movements of the body. From the mute gesture of living models he formulates the one pose which shall best delineate his subject. Later he makes general sketches. Later he makes draws details of the torso, the arms, the head. Paints color imitations are made and the portrait proceeds to the preliminary of canvas.

Portrait Designs

Furthermore Hammer plots his site carefully, designing his portraits architecturally. In his portrait of Edgar Kaufmann, Hammer uses the forearm and as the natural base from which the figure grows.

He established the base of his triangular composition by selecting a brown antique table relieved in color by a gray textile partially covering it, and relieved in form by a shallow bowl of chilled pewter. Placed by the table is an antique chair. Hammer uses the back of the chair which Mr. Kaufmann grips with his left hand, as a device to lead the eye from the inanimate base into the figure. As the forms diminish in mass, they lighten in color until they reach the finely articulated head with its emphatically dark hair.

In the portrait of Edgar Kaufmann, Mr. Hammer has consistently held to the principle that he will not paint a man in conventional business dress garroted by modern collar and cravat. He has painted Mr. Kaufmann informally attired in a dull red woolen tunic, beneath which one sees a short-sleeved white polo shirt carelessly opened at the throat. The figure is placed against a quiet gray background.

This is not a portrait of ostentatiously painted passages hither and yon. Hammer has so thoroughly integrated the picture that it resolves itself as an entity.

It is traditional in its fidelity to the ideals of excellent craftsmanship. It is modern in its representation of a vital person revealed in a mood of imaginative contemplation. It is a glamorous and haunting portrait imprisoned in the serenity of eternal repose.

Incentive in American Bridge Is Play, But in Contract It Is Stake

By ERNEST H. HEINRICHS

(Sun-Telegraph Bridge Expert.)

A NEW YORK woman, who is one of the leading bridge experts of this country, in commenting upon American bridge, writes:

"Let me thank you for your very interesting article on American bridge, which reached me yesterday. Of course, I had heard that Pittsburgh was the home of that excellent idea, but I had not read any article covering the subject previously.

"My husband, who also read it, was extremely enthusiastic, as it has been his contention right along that it is the penalties at contract which have held back the popularity of the game all over the country by frightening the average bridge player and also forcing him to reduce the stakes he has been accustomed to play for.

"I fear I have played contract too long to have any opinion on the scoring, as that has become a part of the game to me. But I can see your point and appreciate it. Contract at present (especially when goulashes are played) has a tremendous gambling element."

Another gratifying experience came to this writer when James Francis Burke expressed his interest in the new game by sending for a copy of American Bridge, which leads us to hope that the idea may even become popular in our national capital.

We received a striking illustration the other evening of the difference between American bridge and contract bridge. Entering the card room of one of our local clubs, we met a friend who greeted us all beaming with smiles.

"You look as if the slump in the stock market hasn't effected you much; what has happened?"

"Just got through a session of contract bridge with a couple of hundred dollars to the good," the friend replied, with the air of an oil magnate.

"Gee, you must have been lucky!"

"Lucky! I'll tell the world! Bid a grand slam with one hand, was doubled, I redoubled, made the contract, and the hand netted me $45."

"What kind of a hand did you play?"

"Oh, I don't remember. But just think—45 berries at one crack!"

Ardent Booster

By a singular coincidence, we met another friend that same evening, who is an ardent booster of American bridge.

Said he, speaking of that game, "It's the only form of bridge I like. Had a wonderful session tonight; every deal full of thrills and excitement. I bid for a grand slame in spades once, and made the contract doubled and redoubled. It was a close shave to win that hand. At the tenth trick I saw that I had my opponent on the left in a squeeze, if I played my last trump, on which he had to discard a winning card, which gave me the slam. Some play, eh, what?"

Take your choice; in American bridge the incentive is the play; in contract, it is the stake you may win or lose.

* * *

The following deal in American bridge was played a few days ago in Wilkinsburg:

NORTH.	EAST.
Spades—10, 6.	Spades—5, 4.
Hearts—10, 9, 7, 5, 3.	Hearts—J, 4, 2.
Clubs—K, 4.	Clubs—8, 7, 2.
Diamonds—A, 8, 7, 3.	Diamonds—Q, J, 10, 9, 4.
WEST.	SOUTH.
Spades—8, 3.	Spades—A, K, Q, J, 9, 7, 2.
Hearts—8, 6.	Hearts—A, K, Q.
Clubs—Q, J, 10, 9, 6, 5, 3.	Clubs—3.
Diamonds—K, 5.	Diamonds—6, 4.

South dealt and at once bid five spades. This bid of one above game informed partner that bidder held a hand with slim possibilities, for which he could furnish 11 tricks. After West passed, North, to show his ace of diamonds, bid six diamonds. East passed and South now bid six spades. West, of course, passed again. North had one more possible trick he could furnish partner. This trick was in clubs, provided partner held the ace, and as his bid of five spades indicated that the ace of hearts, as well as clubs, must be held by South to warrant his original bid of five, North now showed his king of clubs by bidding seven in that suit. This was followed with a bid of seven spades by South, North and South making their contract at that call with the following score: 63 points for seven tricks, 100 points bonus for making game and a bonus of 100 points for bidding and making a grand slam; total 263. West opened the play by leading the queen of clubs.

Bridge Brevities

As an indication of the popularity of the game of bridge, it is interesting to note that at the third annual congress of the American Bridge League, held in Chicago last week, 1,000 bridge players from nearly every state in the union, as well as from Hawaii, Canada and Mexico, were in attendance. Pittsburgh was represented by a large contingent, among them being Mrs. H. D. Stahl and Miss Margaret Beech, who won the woman's championship last year in Cleveland.

A guarded king, the ace being held by opponent on the right, is generally good for a trick.

In estimating the trick-taking possibilities of your hand, a minimum of 2½ sure tricks is necessary for an original bid at American as well as contract bridge.

Ranking sure tricks are ace, 1; king, queen, 1; ace, king, 2; ace, queen, X, 1½; king, queen, jack, 1½; ace, queen, jack, 2; ace, king, queen, 2½; ace, king, jack, 2¼; king, X, ½; queen, X, X, ¼.

If you are third hand, do not make an original bid following two passes unless you hold three sure tricks in your hand, and if you are fourth hand, you should hold a minimum of four sure tricks.

A judicious pass is better than a "wild" bid.

As a partner, there is little to choose between the timid bidder and the wild bidder. Try to be neither the one nor the other.

A bid in excess of a simple raise is sometimes called a jump bid. When playing American bridge, for example, your partner deals, bids one spade, second hand passes, and you bid three instead of merely two spades. The three-spade is a jump bid.

A jump bid does not only indicate support in the suit bid, but also side strength.

In view of the frequent rumors circulated recently that changes have been made in the laws of auction bridge as well as contract bridge, the New York Whist Club, under whose auspices the bridge laws in this country have been formulated, authorizes us to state that "there have been no changes whatsoever made in the official laws of 'auction' or 'contract' bridge."

Any reader of this column may obtain a copy of American bridge by sending a stamped, self-addressed envelope to the Bridge Editor, Sun-Telegraph.

1-ROOM SCHOOL GRADES LOWER

COLUMBUS, Nov. 30.—(AP.)—Pupils in consolidated schools show an average of 21.2 per cent greater achievement than those in the one-room schools of Ohio, it is revealed in a survey just completed by George M. Morris, rural supervisor for the state.

The survey included 35 counties with an approximate enrollment of 133,000 pupils. Each of these showed the average grade of the consolidated school to be above the average in the one-room school for the same examination. The highest percentage of difference was seen in Columbiana County. Pupils in the consolidated schools were graded at 68.5 per cent and in the one-room schools, 37 per cent.

The results of the survey are based upon grades submitted by county superintendents of schools. In most cases the scores include the marks made in the state eighth grade examination given in May, 1929, on geography, grammar, history and arithmetic.

Farmer, 63, Makes His Own Telescope Even Grinding Glass

NORWALK, Wis., Nov. 30.—With some old automobile parts, a few spare dollars and almost unlimited patience, George Koehlar, 63-year-old farmer, has constructed an efficient telescope.

Koehlar's instrument is eight feet long, mounted on a concrete pedestal and has a 10-inch lens. The farmer, who likens his interest in astronomy to the average person's interest in radio, built his telescope with instruction obtained from books.

Grinding the lens, Koehlar said, was the most difficult and tedious part of his task. The work was accomplished in three weeks with carborundum dust.

Since installation of the telescope Koehlar's farm has become popular with neighbors who gaze through the instrument on clear nights and listen to the farmer's discourses on astronomy.

Children's Board Has 1,084 Wards

CHARLESTON, W. Va., Nov. 30.—A.P.)—The State Board of Children's Guardians had 1,084 wards December 1, the report made at a meeting here by Miss Mary L. Yaker, executive secretary, shows.

Of this number 573 were boys and 511 girls. Seven boys and three girls were placed in foster homes and six boys and eight girls were transferred to other homes. Five boys and two girls were placed in the children's home at Elkins.

REFUSE REFUND ON W. VA. TAXES

CHARLESTON, W. Va., Nov. 30.—(AP.)—State Auditor Edgar C. Lawson has announced that he will make no refunds on collection of license taxes. This announcement was made after the State Supreme Court of Appeals had decided in favor of the state against the Wheeling Steel Corporation that the issued and not the authorized capital stock should be used in computing the license tax.

The impression seems to have gone out, Lawson's statement said, that the Supreme Court held the statute requiring the holding of property in the state by a foreign corporation invalid, but this was incorrect.

"The court holds," the auditor said, "that the issued and not the authorized capital should be used in computing the license tax and this may be done under the present statute, consequently, the auditor will, in computing the tax in the future, be required to use the issued stock rather than the authorized. The auditor will not be required to make refunds for license taxes as there is no available fund for this purpose.

He said that, furthermore, the statute had been one of long standing and the construction placed upon it by state authorities in the past was a reasonable one until recent decisions of the United States Supreme Court. The state court then felt bound by the expression of the higher tribunal and made its decision accordingly, Lawson said.

PEDESTRIANS, DRIVERS NEED TO CO-OPERATE

State Motor Federation's President Sees 'Chip on Shoulder' Traffic Danger

HARRISBURG, Nov. 30.—"Take the chip off your shoulder when walking or driving on streets thronged with holiday shoppers," S. Edward Gable, president of the Pennsylvania Motor Federation, said today in cautioning motorists and pedestrians to exercise extreme care in Christmas season crowds.

"All too frequently at this season we read of deaths or injuries on crowded streets as the result of pedestrians being hit by motor cars," the Federation head stated. "For some reason or other, when we drive the pedestrian seems to be reckless and inconsiderate; when we walk, the driver reminds us of a speed-crazy fool. And with the general attitude, each one carrying a chip on his shoulder, it is hard to be careful.

"There is no more fitting time than this season of good will to take that chip off the shoulder and, whether afoot or at the wheel, to be careful and considerate of the other person. In Christmas shopping crowds, with cars taxing the traffic facilities of business centers and with pedestrian throngs at record peak, danger lurks at intersections and all along the streets. In traffic such as this the man or woman at the wheel and the person afoot must be on the alert at all times.

"If the pedestrian, in crossing the streets, will always watch his step, obey the traffic signals, and see to it that he does not step suddenly off the curb into the path of an approaching car there will be far fewer accidents and fewer sad hearts as the result of Christmas-time motor accidents," Mr. Gable said. To the driver he directed this word of caution: "No matter how careful you are at all times in the operation of your car, try to be just a little more so in the Christmas shopping traffic. Keep in mind at all times when driving through shopping areas that the person afoot is likely to do the unexpected, and be ready for that emergency. At all times keep your car fully under control so that you can bring it to a stop at short notice. Take no chances whatever."

'Rich Heir' Schemer Commits Suicide

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 30.—Rather than face questioning on an alleged "rich heir" borrowing scheme, Russell H. Killgore, of Altadena, shot and killed himself at the home of his mother-in-law, Mrs. Addie M. Shepp, 1432 Lincoln avenue, Pasadena.

Killgore was being sought by Los Angeles officers, who had arrested Henry D. Stewart, also of Pasadena, in connection with the same case.

According to police, Stewart and Killgore obtained about $1,800 from R. H. McDaniels and L. P. Richards, Los Angeles oil station operators, upon representations that Killgore had fallen heir to a fortune of $2,000,000.

DENOUNCES—Joe McDowell, University of Kansas law student with the cup awarded him by the co-eds in their contest to select the best orator. He spoke on how useless women are on the Kansas campus!

STATE PRISON SYSTEM SCORED

tem will improve the morale of all the state penal institutions.

Mr. Hearst pointed out that under the present system the prisons were in fact "criminal colleges," where first offenders and other convicts of the less hardened type were thrown in contact with the most calloused criminals and in idleness were educated to commit further crime.

He lauded the undertaking of the California authorities to put prisoners to work. He pointed to Wisconsin and other states where the convicts are engaged in useful labor, where, by giving them something with which to engage their minds and hands, there is little opportunity for them to plot mischief. Many, he said, could be taught trades and with their skill and training in industry the one-time convict would be more likely to turn his life toward upright living.

ROCKVIEW MODEL FARM

The Pennsylvania prison farm at Rockview is one of the largest in the country and is the best equipped. Eight hundred men employed there spend practically all their daylight hours out of doors. The yield of the farm supplies the prisons and other institutions with milk, butter, eggs, meat, fruit and vegetables. Hundreds of acres in the farm are not under cultivation, and when it is entirely turned to agriculture it is declared that it would supply nearly every institution in the state. Under convict labor laws now in force in Pennsylvania the sale of prison farm products in the open market is forbidden.

The Los Angeles Examiner is supporting the California prison reforms and among the first measures undertaken were efforts toward the provision for labor. Other western states have the same plans in view since the Hearst newspapers called attention to the jail deliveries and other outrages which were traced directly to idleness and demoralizing conditions in the prisons.

Ohio Negro Honored By Phi Eta Sigma

COLUMBUS, Nov. 30.—(AP.)—That brains are cosmopolitan and have little to do with social position is exemplified in the recent election of seven freshmen to the Ohio State University chapter of Phi Eta Sigma, honorary scholarship fraternity.

Of the seven, chosen on the basis of a scholastic average of at least 3.5 points out of a possible 4.0, one is a Negro. The occupations of the seven parents include postoffice clerk, teacher, truck driver, attorney, real estate dealer, housekeeper and chemist.

Ohioans so honored are: James D. Long, Centerburg; Paul Grim, Leesburg; Ralston Russell, Pomeroy; Joseph U. Schoenborn, Columbus; Walter L. Harris, Richwood, and Frederick M. Mayer, Columbus.

Stage Girls' Kisses Banned at College

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 30.—A chorus girl's kiss with every subscription was the lure held out to prospective purchasers of "The Gopher," undergraduate year book at the University of Minnesota—until school officials heard about it.

Managers of the drive had engaged 12 girls, appearing at a local theater. They were to have appeared on the campus for an hour and 15 minutes.

"Nothing doing," quoth Dean E. E. Nicholson. And the subscription campaign returned to its normal, drab way.

BERNARD SHAW SCANS SOCIAL CHANGES IN U.S.

Philosopher Interviews Woman Writer on Conditions—Receives Surprises

George Bernard Shaw, critic, playwright, philosopher, today delves into the interesting problems of the social struggle throughout the world. Ella Winter, the writer, tells how American workers are winning their uphill fight. Shaw, in the light of this, reveals the situation existing in England. Not only that, but the Irish genius puts his finger on the war madness that moved President Woodrow Wilson. This is the second of three articles presenting a new light on the many-sided character of G. B. S.

I am Interviewed By Bernard Shaw

By ELLA WINTER
(Mrs. Lincoln Steffens)

LONDON, Nov. 23.—George Bernard Shaw smiled his slow, blue-eyed smile.

"Tell me about yourself," he said.

I told him.

"So you're not an American, you came from Australia and went to the school of economics and then married an American. But can anyone with a name like Ella Winter not be an American?"

My British blood rose in its defense, expostulating.

"I suppose," said Shaw maliciously, "it's poet Ella Winter Willcox . . . Ella Willcox Wheeler . . . Ella Wheeler Willcox . . . what is it?—that makes you sound American."

I ignored my not-quite namesake.

Economics Opens Door

"It was the school of economics that led me to you," I said. "I used to go to every Fabian lecture that was ever held, when I was a student here, for about five years. And it was as an English economist, brought up with European ideas of solving the social problem, that I came to America and saw there the thing that I came to talk to you about, Mr. Shaw, my discovery of America.

"I have been there two and a half years, and been about a lot, and, d you know, they seem there to be solving the social problem, to be getting there the things we have always fought for in the Labor party—through capitalism. Workmen are getting not only food, shelter and clothing for all, but also a car, and a radio.

"I'm lecturing!" I said, noticing how much I had been talking.

"Go on," he said. "I want to hear this. I've heard a little about it, but not like this."

High Pay, Big Market

My own enthusiasm bore me on.

"Employers in America are beginning to realize that the working man makes their market and only high wages can make an effective demand, and so our old vicious circle seems to be turning into a benign circle. Because, of course the greater the market, the greater the possibilities of mass-production, and the more mass-production the cheaper the goods, and therefore again the greater possibilities of effective demand."

We smiled at mutual remembrances of college classes in economics. "But if there were trouble," the seasoned Fabian lecturer asked, "wouldn't wages be lowered there, too?"

"No, that's just it," I answered. "I met a great oil man, the biggest oil owner in the Middle West (you see how my phraseology is getting Americanized—but this man really is an 'oil king') and I asked him whether in a dispute between capital and labor they would cut wages or profits."

He was amazed.

"Wages? We can't cut wages!" he cried.

'Oh!' Gasps Shaw

"Oh, he said that, did he?" That was Shaw.

"But is this process conscious?" he continued. "Do the industrialists know why they pay high wages?"

I told him I thought that not many did yet; "that as a matter of fact, the most interested reader of Henry Ford's life was Ford, that Ford's announcement on his birthday that some day profits would have to be abolished altogether and all go back into the industry, shows what a great difference has come into capitalist mentality."

"But the awful thing is this," said my interviewer, "and it is happening over here, too, that enterprises are being taken over more and more into the hands of bankers and financial agents who have no relation to the industry at all and know nothing about it."

Shaw leaned forward, gesticulating with his graceful hands. "The kind of person I portrayed in 'Mangin'—the financier in 'Heartbreak House,' who has not even put his own money into the enterprises he runs."

Break Coming

"Yes," I added eagerly, "that's why it seems to us this break is coming between owners and managers; the break exemplified by the fight between Rockefeller and F[illegible] in their re[illegible] direction of Standard Oil of Indiana.

"If there is such a break, the managers, the technical people, will be the more radical because they want efficiency and new methods, and so they will be allied with labor (who in the States are small capitalists) against ownership, ownership that has made its pile and is willing to sit tight and take no chance. And there will be a new alignment, ownership versus management, instead of capital versus labor."

"That would be something new," Shaw admitted, shifting on his upright chair. "Of course, here we try to bring these interests together by legislation. I said to Maxton (James Maxton, the left wing Scottish Labor member) when I was speaking at the Fabian summer school at Welwyn Garden City recently, 'Why don't you send a commission to the cotton people and say, "You must make these and these adjustments to make your industry pay," and Maxton had the grace to say, 'Yes, we could do that under the trade facilities act.'

"With matters in the hands of bodies like these, one would then come to my final point of Socialism—distribution."

"Tell me about your philosophical men of action, Mr. Shaw," I said, leading him back to what I thought important. "You have so many of them in your plays—superman, the man of destiny, Napoleon, the Emperor of Turania—whom, I noticed, you dressed in a Fascist shirt in Methusaleh. You seem to have in mind a special kind of man, who can think while he is in action. Do you believe, then, that a man can think once he has started to act?"

Can't Act Quickly

"I suppose," said Shaw, "Most people think a bit and then act, but I can't, I can't act quickly. I have no presence of mind. It takes me 20 years of thinking before I can do something." He crossed his neat legs at the knees, and kept his eyes on me intently.

"Do you think that was the tragedy of Wilson?" I said. "Having made up his mind to be one of the actors in the drama of peace when he came to Paris, he could no longer listen to advice . . . ."

"The trouble with Wilson," interrupted G. B. S., and the teasing smile dropped out of his face, "is that he got war-fever. At the beginning of the war, Mons, the Marne, Hill 60, young men of all countries being shot down in hundreds of thousands—people couldn't grasp it; it was too big, it was too dreadful for people to understand."

His face grew pained, horror-struck, the face of one who had felt the war day by day unceasingly, every day of those five years.

"Then came the Lusitania, and that was one small isolated event. People could grasp that, and all the vague terror that could not be definitely placed before expressed itself then. That is when Wilson got war-fever and it was with that war-fever that he came to Paris."

"Do you think liberalism has anything more to offer in our society today?" I asked, "or is it dead, bankrupt—the old Winsonian liberalism—of no use in our industrial age?"

"Now, of course," he said, "it has no place, but when work has been reduced to four hours a day and people have so much more leisure, then liberalism will be useful again, for some people will always want to do certain things and other people won't want to let them."

In next Sunday's article, Shaw will tell how democracy could be successful if a chemical analysis could be perfected by which the highest type men could be chosen for the highest offices, and so on down to the local council posts. And he paints a marvellous, soul-stirring picture of his native Ire-

BREAD is an essential part of our diet. When made of the proper ingredients it provides roughage which is necessary for the health of the individual. BRAUN'S WHEAT KING BREAD is made from unbleached flour and, therefore, is an ideal food. The texture of the bread is light, due to the scientific treatment it receives in mixing. It is hygienically wrapped and may be purchased in the sliced or unsliced loaf.

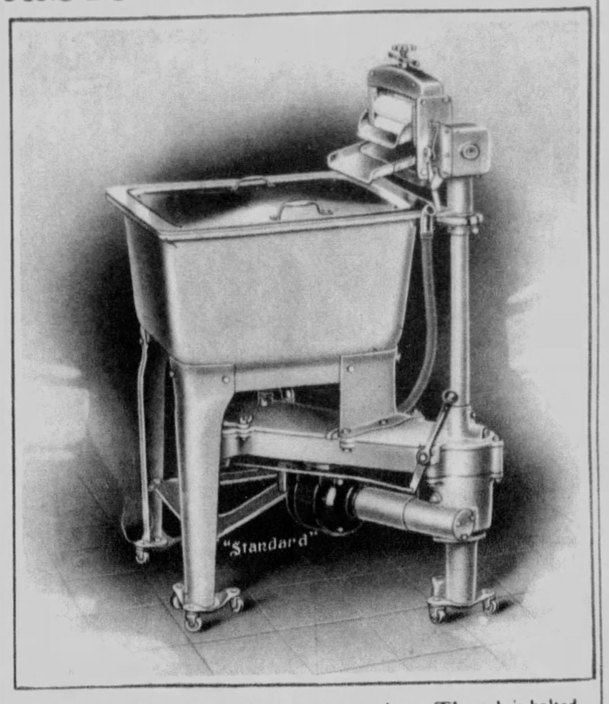
"Standard" Portable Clothes-Washer

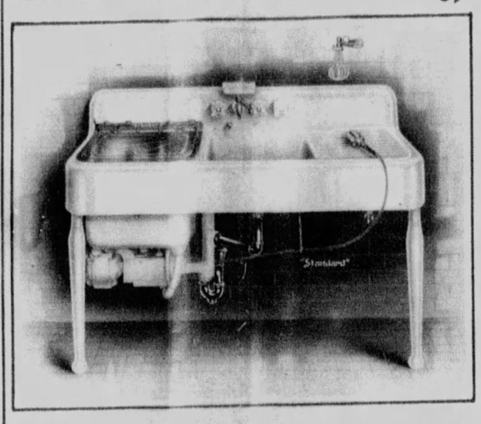
Sturdier in Construction—Efficient—Economical—Easy to Clean

Here is a Clothes-Washer that is really different. It employs the efficient reversing agitator principle, time-tested and proven; the sturdy wringer is all-metal with balloon type soft rubber rollers, so easy on buttons. This "Standard" Portable Electric Clothes-Washer is so sturdy, so strong in construction that it will stand up under the rigorous demands of years of constant service. Long life and trouble free service and its reasonable cost, $134.50, make it a most economical modern home necessity. Come into the showroom for a demonstration and an explanation of a liberal Time Payment feature that makes it available to everyone.



Note the sturdy build of this attractive washer. The tub is bolted securely to well-braced legs; the gears, of best quality steel, are fully enclosed. The iron tub is enameled with the famous "Standard" Acid-Resisting Enamel, which is not affected by acids or cleansers; which retains the heat longer; which can be cleaned by merely wiping with a damp cloth.

And There Is a New "Standard" Electric Dishwasher Too



Nothing will lighten the labors of the housewife, or make conditions satisfactory for the servants, more than will a "Standard" Portable Electric Clothes-Washer or one of the new "Standard" Electric Dishwashers. Three times daily—every day—must greasy dishes be washed. And—day in, day out—this new Dishwasher will perform this disagreeable task for you.

The dishes revolve slowly in a sturdy basket, sprayed by strong streams of soapy water. They are rinsed by clean water direct from the hot water line. This dishwasher can be had as shown, in smaller sizes for the apartment kitchen, or with flat rim for tiled-in installations.

SELECT YOUR GLASSES AS CAREFULLY AS YOUR APPAREL.

YOU wouldn't wear an unbecoming hat nor ill-fitting clothes—why, then, wear old-style spectacles? Guildcraft Spectacles and Eyeglasses are designed, styled and made by expert craftsmen as carefully as fine jewelry—yet they are relatively inexpensive. They not only fit perfectly, adding to your comfort, but there are models that will actually improve your appearance.

PENN SCHOOL OF AVIATION

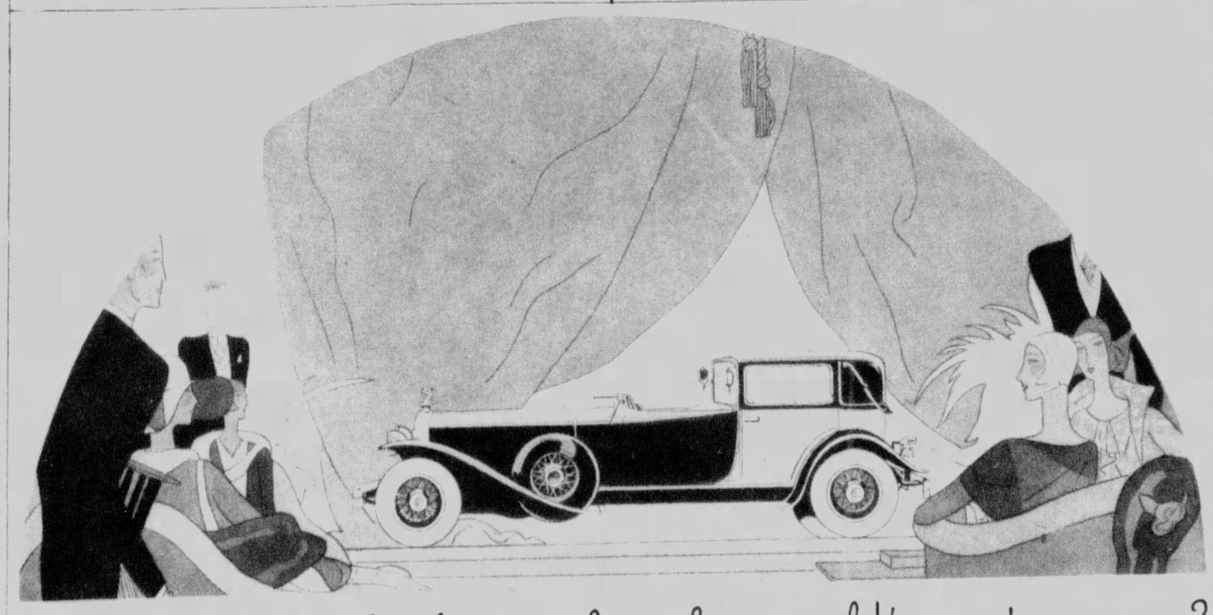
Pennsylvania's First Women's Flying School

Louise Thaden, winner of the First Women's Transcontinental Air Derby (from Santa Monica, Cal., to Cleveland, O.), is organizing the First Women's Flying School in Pennsylvania. The school will be a division of the Penn School of Aviation, operated by a subsidiary of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation at the Pittsburgh-Butler Airport. Regular instructors of the Penn School under the direction of Lieut. W. S. Rosenberger, will give the flying instructions.

Much enthusiasm has already been created in Pittsburgh for this Women's Flying School, and Louise Thaden is busy conducting daily interviews with those interested. "That there are exceptional opportunities for women in aviation is obvious," Mrs. Thaden states. "With the huge airport we have—one of the finest I have ever seen in my trips over the country—with the best type of planes available, and with instruction methods that have already made a perfect record for the Penn School of Aviation, our women students can be assured of safe and thorough training."

In addition, Penn School offers ground and business courses that will qualify women as well as men for positions in the aviation industry.

Louise Thaden invites every woman who is interested to come and have a personal talk with her at the offices of the Pittsburgh Aviation Industries Corporation in the Oliver Building, Pittsburgh, Pa.



Who sets the fashions for the world's motor cars?

WHO SETS the fashions for everything? Isn't it true that nothing is fashionable until certain women of taste and social position approve it? Then it becomes the mode.

Motor cars are no exception. Here, too, the word of this group of social leaders is law. And because they are, almost everyone of them, included in Rolls-Royce's clientele, this car has become the criterion of motor car fashions.

Rolls-Royce has won this acceptance, not by straining for the bizarre, but by a complete understanding of that irreproachable good taste which always appeals to people of gentle breeding.

The color schemes that you see on this car, even when they flash their brightest, are always in complete harmony. Upholstery fabrics and fittings are of that simple, livable beauty which you choose for your own home. The gleaming coachwork is the creation of Brewster & Company, the coachwork division of Rolls-Royce, and the oldest, most famous coach-builders in America. No note of the rococo will you find anywhere in this car—Rolls-Royce gains its smartness from the perfect blending of every detail.

The flawless correctness of these externals extends beneath the surface, into every mechanical part of the car. Rolls-Royce's performance, like its appearance, is always quietly, unobtrusively smart. Ask anything of this car—it responds, not with the straining of a "show-off," but with the easy nonchalance of a thoroughbred.

You float over boulevards with no other sound from the car than the swish of the tires on the asphalt. The motor? You have to strain your ears to hear its silken purring. Rolls-Royce is so quiet, so vibrationless, that you can read a novel as you glide along.

Should a red light flash, the sudden stop seems leisurely, so gently do Rolls-Royce brakes take hold. Even rough roads fail to mar the arm-chair ease of your progress, for Rolls-Royce's springs absorb the shocks before they reach you. You ride serenely, cradled in comfort, secure in the knowledge that Rolls-Royce is the safest car in the world.

Yes, Rolls-Royce is all that you have wanted your next motor car to be. A car whose aristocratic bearing will never cease to charm you—whose lithe performance will never cease to thrill you. A car that, like your gowns, helps to set the fashion for the world.

Gainaday Electric Washer

The Gainaday Electric Washer is a gift that lives through the years. It is not laid away and forgotten with the passing of the holidays. Every washday it will be a pleasant reminder of your thoughtfulness.

In terms of efficiency and utility, no modern electrical appliance gives more than the Gainaday. It puts an end to washday drudgery, the most burdensome and exhausting of household tasks. Clothes are washed more quickly, more thoroughly and without wear. Swirling water action in the big nickel-plated copper tub does the work.

All materials are the best, non-rusting, non-corrosive. With the fewest possible number of moving parts there is virtually nothing to get out of order.

No gift for your wife or mother could be more practical and at the new low price of $129.50 it is the world's greatest washer value. Phone or call upon your nearest Gainaday dealer. He will gladly arrange a free demonstration and explain the convenient monthly payment plan. Act now—don't put it off until Christmas Eve.

There are more than [illegible] college women in Allegheny County. The College Club is their center. 14 North Craig St. Mayflower [illegible]

The President's Message

The College Club of Pittsburgh was organized twenty years ago to unite college women. We have fostered the ideal of the higher education of women and promoted philanthropic and civic projects in the community.

The members of the College Club greatly appreciate the generous co-operation of the advertisers who have made this supplement of nation wide interest. The results of this endeavor will enable us to carry on our work with greater efficiency and usefulness.

HAVE YOU VISITED UTILITY HALL?

UTILITY HALL, you know, is the permanent Model Home of the Duquesne Light and Equitable Gas Companies, designed for the sole purpose of assisting women in the business of making a home. Just now it's alive with interest in the fall classes.

There are three series of these weekly classes . . . the Hostess Series, the Beauty in the Home Series and the Homemakers Series. Entertaining, Home Decoration, Marketing, Budgeting, Meal Planning . . . many other things vital to the homemaker are subjects for discussion.

Some weeks ago Utility Hall had the pleasure of entertaining the College Club. It looks forward to having this pleasure repeated again and again; and it hopes that many other women's organizations and many other individuals will come in, make themselves at home, and avail themselves of any of Utility Hall's services. Miss Karen Fladoes, Home Service Director, (Grant 4300, Line 403) will gladly tell you more about Utility Hall.

A Bank for Women

THERE are certain features about the Mellon National Bank which make it a particularly attractive place for women to bank. The Bank is conveniently located in the center of the shopping district, and not far from parking space. All the main departments of the Bank are on one floor . . . the beautiful big, cool main banking room, the Investment Bureau, Travel Bureau, Safe Deposit Vault, Telephones, Telegraph and Ladies' Rest Room. Almost any transaction can be completed without tiresome climbing of steps.

There are twenty-four tellers' windows, at each of which are stationed both paying and receiving tellers. The familiar annoyance of moving from window to window to make deposits or withdrawals is thus eliminated. It is never necessary to wait in line, as the large number of windows makes it possible for us to serve many customers at once.

These unusual features explain why the Mellon National Bank numbers hundreds of women among its customers.

BETTY LAMPS TO BEACONS

The Farmers Deposit National Bank enjoys the distinction of having been illuminated by every form of lighting that has been in general use in the United States.

At its beginning 97 years ago, house lighting was usually by means of wax or tallow candles. Occasional homes, however, still depended upon "betty" lamps, which burned fish or animal oils and were originally brought over in the Mayflower. By 1840 gas or a modified type of oil lamps superseded candles. Kerosene lamps came into general use about the time of the Civil War.

Before Edison's electric lights were widely adopted, this bank had enjoyed a half century of successful activity and progress.

How The World Would Look If We Were Built Differently

Unsuspected Marvels of the Universe Would Be Unfolded If Our Eyes, Ears, Nose and Brain Were Improved or the Laws of Nature Somewhat Changed

By Prof. Rene Thevenin,
The Distinguished French Scientist.

CHAPTER I.

IT IS possible to imagine a man who would be at once blind, deaf, deprived of the senses of taste and smell and insensitive to cold or heat, as well as to the feel of objects around him.

Yet this man would be alive, assuming that he could live for a time under such conditions. But from the physical point of view he would be exactly like a dead man or a piece of lifeless matter such as stone. Not only would he not have any knowledge of the world around him, but he would not even be conscious of his own existence, as this can only be revealed to a man when his senses place him in communication with the universe.

Man's organs of sense are indispensable apparatuses to put our brains in communication with nature and to explain to ourselves what we are. Without them we should be enclosed in a totally dark and silent prison. But our eyes open the windows of this prison. Our ears install telephones in it, which enable us to hear what is said outside, and so on. Thanks to them, we are not isolated in nothingness. We know that something exists outside ourselves, and we learn to recognize it and to measure it, using our own bodies as a basis for this measurement.

Unfortunately for us, these physical apparatuses are far from being perfect. If they procure us some information about the universe, they leave us in ignorance of a larger amount of it. These open windows only receive a few rays of light and only uncover a small part of the horizon. These telephones do not work when the voice that comes over them is a little too low or a little too high. And if we were to reason according to the only evidences which they furnish us, we should have only a very rough idea of the world, a very confused one and, consequently, a very false one.

For a long time, however, humanity was obliged to rely upon those means for its instruction. And men believed that outside of what the senses revealed there was nothing.

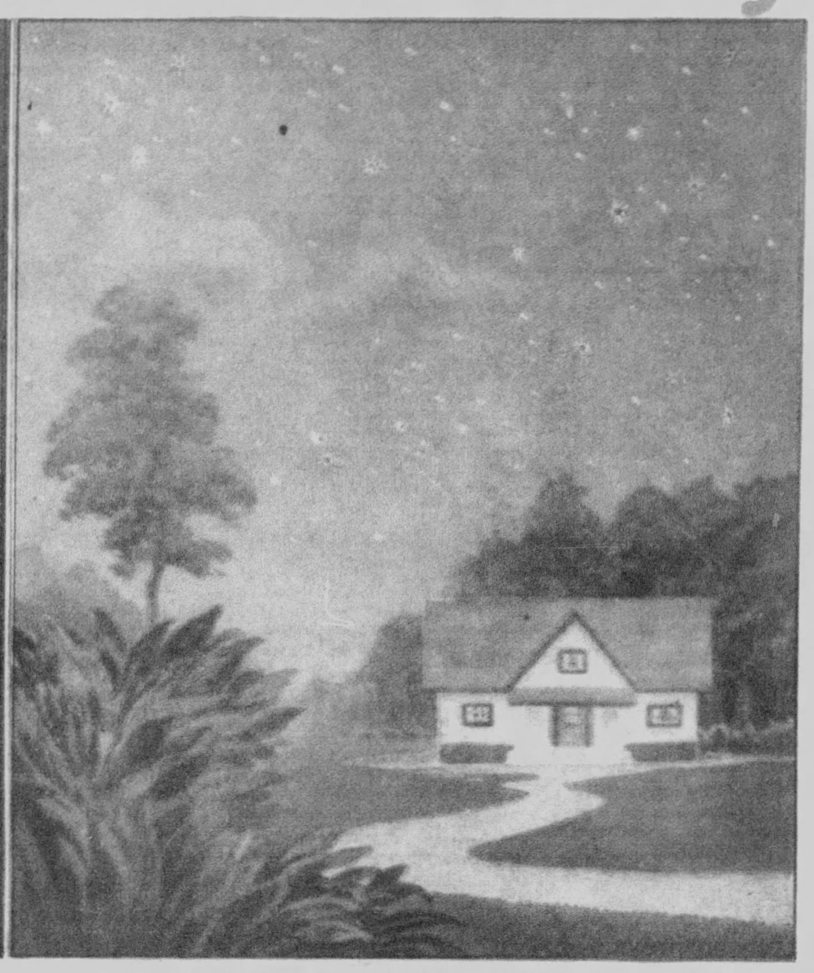
With the progress of science we have little by little become aware of this ignorance, and we have sought to free ourselves from it. In the course of this research we have observed that these appliances which nature has given us might, with certain modifications and improvements, work much better, and teach us truths of which we did not suspect the existence. In a word, to take up our first comparison, we found ourselves in the position where the blind and deaf man would be, if he learned suddenly that it was possible to make his eyes see clearly and his ears function, and should struggle afterward by natural and artificial methods, to obtain this priceless and marvelous result.

Is it possible that a being could exist who would know the world that is hidden from our senses? After having imagined a being deprived of every sensation, is it reasonable to imagine another being gifted with senses much more subtle, much more extended and much more perfect than ours? If we regard such a being as possible, can we conceive the aspect under which the world would present itself to him, an aspect which would be quite different from the one we know?

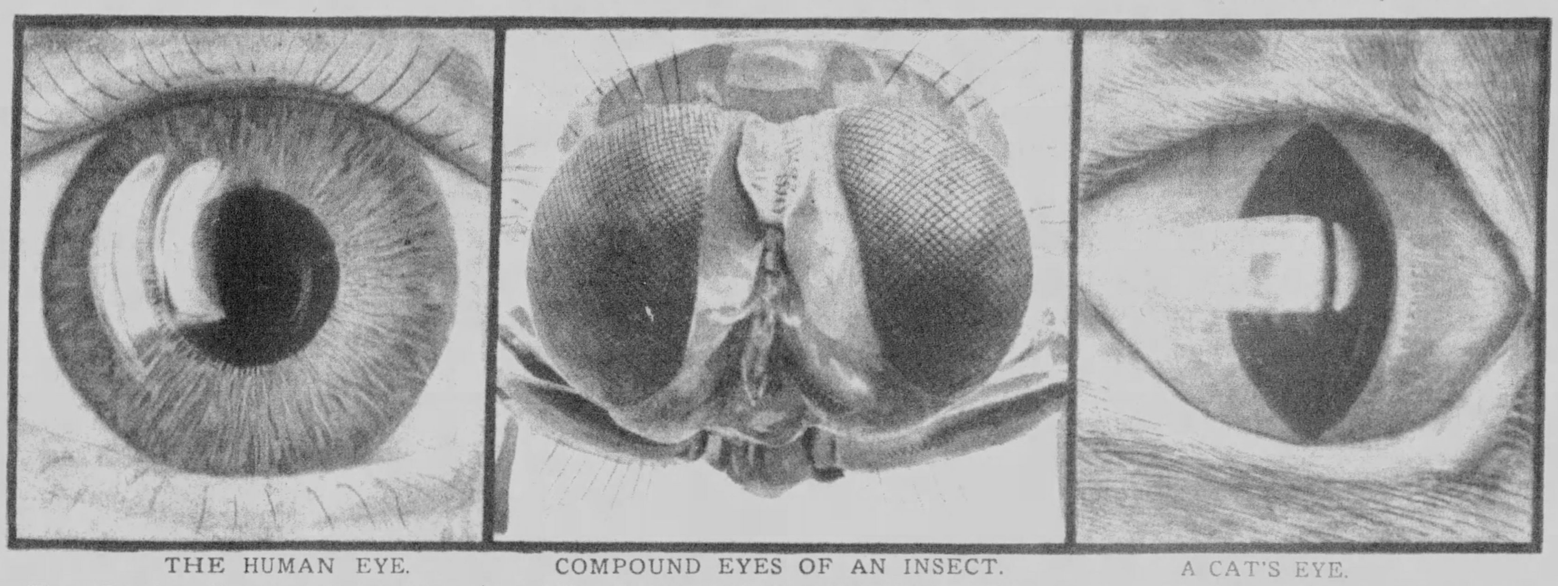
The eyes of man and the vertebrate animals may be compared to a photograph apparatus. The crystalline lens of the eye is the objective and the retina the sensitive plate. This apparatus in the head registers an image of objects when its mechanism is excited by light. We must first know what light is in order to understand the functioning of the eye. We know that all bodies may become luminous at a certain high temperature. In this condition the molecules composing them are animated by very rapid vibratory movements, which flow out in the form of waves, like those which are found in the water when one throws a stone into it.

We shall soon see, moreover, that most of the phenomena of nature, if not all, have vibrations as their cause, whether they are the movements of the clock or the waves of the sea, whether they are sound or heat, whether they are electricity or the X-rays. We may, perhaps, find that everything in the universe is vibration. The various phenomena of the universe are distinguished just by the frequency and length of the waves which are peculiar to them.

How a Landscape at Night Looks to the Human Eye.



How the Same Landscape at the Same Moment Looks to a Cat.



THE HUMAN EYE. COMPOUND EYES OF AN INSECT. A CAT'S EYE.

These Drawings Serve as a Simple Illustration of How Differently Things Would Appear If, for Instance, Man's Eye Had Even the Greater Sensitiveness of the Cat's. Drawings Made to the Same Scale to Show Nature's Different Methods of Construction of Eyes.

The luminous waves given out by matter or absorbed by it are propagated with an enormous speed, about 186,000 miles a second. They strike our eyes, which receive them, and take an impression from them, and then communicate the sensation to our brain. From this moment we can notice that our eye is an imperfect apparatus which only lets us know a tiny part of the reality. In fact, the science of physics, with its experiences and deductions, teaches us several things which our vision alone would not have revealed to us if we had relied only upon it to instruct us.

Let us examine, for instance, natural light, that of the sun in its purest brilliancy. Our eye tells us that this light is formed of a single ray, the color of which is white. It is, in fact, under this appearance that the ray passes through the crystalline lens of the eye and imprints itself on the retina. And it seems to us that because we see it thus, it is so in reality. But if, instead of passing this ray directly through the eye we cause it to pass first through a crystalline prism of triangular form, this white ray is at once transformed, and will appear to us not so simple as we thought, but composed of rays of different colors—violet, indigo, blue, green, yellow, orange and red.

What has happened? We can guess, in part. Light is not a thing of one kind, but a bundle of complex elements, of which all are not gifted with the same properties. When these combined rays meet a transparent surface of a different density to the one through which they have been passing, they leave the straight line, which they have been following, and continue their way at an angle which is different for each one of them. That is how they appear to us when separated from one another.

An interesting suggestion may be made here. If the crystalline lens of the human eye which we have just called the objective of our photographic apparatus, could by means of muscular contraction change at will its curved form and take the prismatic form, it would show us light split up and the world would appear under an extraordinary aspect, in which we should no longer be able to see what we have been used to seeing. It must be understood that the form of objects would be completely changed, and would appear to us bathed in a sort of crazy fog, in which it would be impossible to recognize them.

But suppose that our brain adapted itself to these new appearances, the colors would still be quite different from those to which we are used. Only objects of pure coloring would undergo no change, an absolute blue would always be blue, green always green, and red always red. But as soon as white was mixed in these elements it would take on, in a more or less considerable degree, the various colors of the rainbow, and thus the appearance of the universe would be changed.

Is the change suggested in our physical organs possible, even in theory? Undoubtedly the lens of the eye is capable of producing, in part, these results. Under the control of the ciliary muscle, which contracts the pupil of the eye, it can slightly change its form, or accommodate itself as oculists say, so that the image which passes through it may be produced on the retina. If we could sufficiently increase this power we would arrive at the result we are considering.

The movements which the eye executes to facilitate or improve vision are not the only ones of which it is capable. Continuing the comparison of the eye with a photographic camera, we see that it can work as a "diaphragm," which regulates the amount of light passing through, in the proportion that this is too weak or too strong for the retina. It is the iris, or colored part of the eye, which plays this part, opening and closing the pupil, which is a circular hole.

Again, we observe that our human instrument does not always work as well as we might like. The sensitiveness of its photographic plate is not very great. It veils itself if the light is too intense, or else it does not do its work if the objects are not well lighted. We have reason to complain of our eyes, for we know that there are around us many animals more favored in this respect.

Turn to an owl or a cat, and see how their eyes work. The iris of the cat's eye, instead of having a round form at the pupil, shuts it or opens it like a sort of curtain, closing almost completely when the light is bright, or opening it to the maximum by an opposite movement, thus allowing the smallest rays of light to reach the retina.

The retina of the cat, moreover, is much more sensitive to light than ours, and what is darkness to us is a fair degree of daylight to these gifted animals. It is sufficient that there is the slightest ray of light in the darkness to enable them to see, while we are in complete blindness. Thus a man at night will fall into a pit while a cat will see it plainly and walk past it without danger.

Then there is the owl. During the two or three hours after sunset, when it is night for man, an owl sees better than we can see in the sunshine a field mouse running through the grass over the dead leaves, even though the little creature has the same color as its surroundings.

For such beings as the cat and the owl darkness hardly exists, and it is certain that for them the spectacle which the sky of night offers us is almost totally different from what we see. The sky would retain its colors to their sight if the retina of their eyes is as sensitive to color as ours. In the same way the landscape, which appears to us uniformly black at night, would retain its masses of green foliage, its variations of brown, yellow and white soil, and its many-colored flowers. The perception of these different tones is only a matter of visual sensitiveness; we can realize this by an experiment which is easy to make.

At twilight let a person place at a certain distance from his eyes several pieces of paper or other material, some deep red, others light blue. There will come a moment when at from 15 to 30 feet it will be impossible for him to distinguish blue from white, red from black, provided he has not learned the position of these colors in advance. Blue and red will then appear just the same; things will not have any color for the observer.

However, if he draws near to these objects he will be able to distinguish again blue and red. This is a proof that the colors have not ceased to exist, but that our retina is not sensitive enough to perceive them.

One might object that it is no better to have the eyes of an owl than those of a man; for if man does not see in the dark, the owl can only see very badly in full daylight.

This is true. But, as we are building up an ideal being, we can give him the visual sensitiveness of the owl during the hours of darkness, and for the daylight we can select for him from among living creatures eyes capable of holding much more light than those of human beings.

We can borrow this perfected visual apparatus from the insects. For the purposes of their world these are admirably gifted in this respect. The construction of their visual mechanism is quite different from ours.

In most cases the insect's eye is not simple, but composite, that is to say, formed by the juxtaposition of a great number of elementary eyes, not each with a crystalline lens, but fixed side by side to one another in a mass of many surfaces, cut in facets, like a mosaic, each of these facets being a point to which terminates a corresponding optic nerve.

Among certain insects such as the dragon fly, the number of eyes in one insect may reach 10,000, each

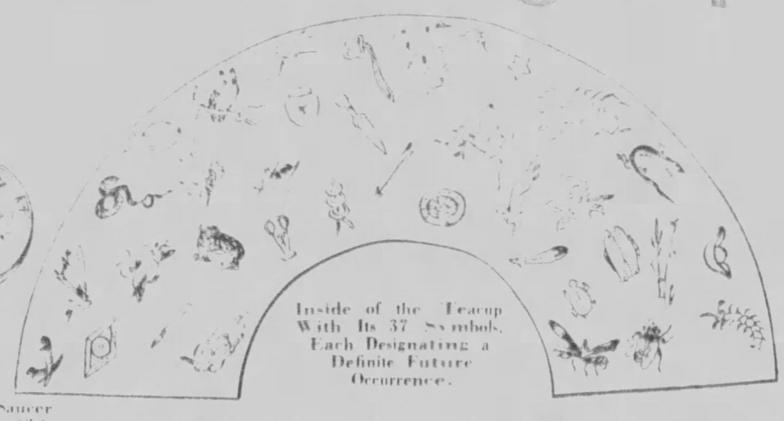
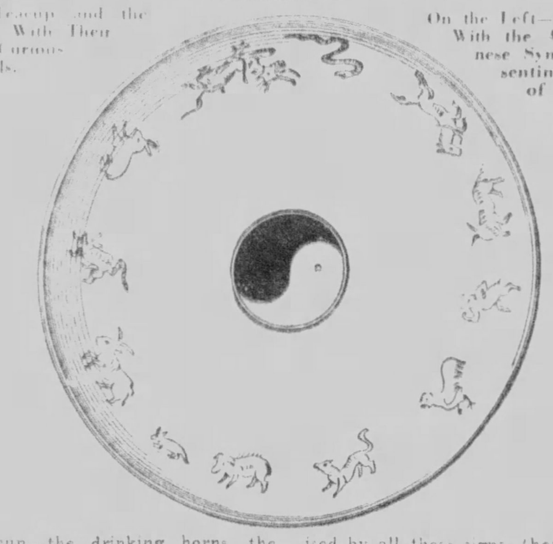
EASY TO FIND OUT FORTUNE WITH NEW "DIVINING CUP"

Outside of the Magic Teacup, Bearing the Figure of Lu Tung Pin, Patron Genius of Fortune Tellers.

The Teacup and the Saucer With Their Many Curious Symbols.



Inside of the Teacup With Its 37 Symbols, Each Designating a Definite Future Occurrence.



On the Left—The Saucer With the Ancient Chinese Symbol Representing the Union of Light and Darkness and Its 12 Animals on the Border.

A WASHINGTON woman recently [illegible] with the magic cup and the hare cup [illegible] woman.

[illegible] boat foretells a voyage by water, the wheel indicates a land journey, the bamboo signifies good health or recovery from illness, and the arrow promises news from a friend who has been away for a long time. The wriggling fish is to be the rousing literary success, the peony is a symbol of happy fortune, and the frog is an omen of money to be made.

The cicada means the great happiness of dawning love, the vase indicates that a new child is to be received from some loved person, feathers are signs of letters to be expected, and the heathorn blossom promises obstacles that will be overcome.

Interspersed with these symbols of good fortune are others quite as pleasant for the tea drinking reader of his own future. The paired fish are twin signs of a harmonious marriage, the mandarin ducks are emblems of constant love, and the tortoise a promise of long life. The fingered citron or "hand of Buddha" portends great happiness, the star foretells new and useful friendships, and the silver shoe is a harbinger of an inheritance.

Three other favorable symbols are found on the inner surface of the magic cup—the drinking horns, the melon and the dragon-fly. The first indicates a coming festivity, the second wealth, and the third carefree enjoyment. To offset the good luck promised by all these signs, there are several character that no tea-leaf seer likes to find when he's plotting his future.

The wasp is a symbol of a coming annoyance or minor mishap, the fox is a demon who works mischief to himself (but only the wrongdoer need fear the fox), and the two-edged sword stands as a symbol of quarrel or strife. One edge of the sword represents envy and the other edge greed. Other characters that portend misfortune are the scorpion, the centipede, the owl, the broken fan and the snake.

In the center of the saucer is an ancient Chinese symbol representing the union of Yang, the dark, and Yin, the light, the male and female elements from which all living things have evolved. And around the rim of the saucer are twelve animals, all important creatures in fortune telling as done by the Chinese.

To tell your fortune with the "divining cup," you drink the tea, invert the cup on the saucer, and note toward which of the animals on the saucer the glorified fly-swatter of Lu Tung Pin points. This determines the general character of your fortune for the next lunar month. This done, the rest of the fortune is read on the tea leaves clinging about the characters inside the cup.

The reading of the fortune is done like this: Suppose the fly-swatter of Lu Tung Pin points to the monkey (one of the 12 animals on the saucer). The monkey is a symbol of gaiety and happiness. Therefore a happy month is indicated. The diviner now consults the inside of the cup and finds, let us say, ten leaves on the wheel, the paired fish, the feather, and the melon, with several small leaves near the arrows, the stars, the tortoise and the dragon-fly.

The leaves on the wheel foretell a land journey, called for my the writen communications promised by the leaves on the feathers. The leaves near the arrows promise the companionship of friend not seen for a long time. The dragon-fly predicts a jolly time in the course of which new and useful friendships will be made.

The paired fish offer expectations of a happy marriage and the melon gives news of a considerable sum of money that is coming to the diviner.

Of course, all predictions made by the divining cup are not as pleasant as this one by which the use of the cup is explained, for Lu Tung Pin's fly-swatter may point to the serpent, or the pig. In that case, the reader of his fortune—if he believes in signs—may expect a false friend to do him an ill turn, or look for days of trouble and despondency.

Shopgirl Wins Movie Crown

NOT so many months ago Brita Appelgren, one of the newest and most popular of Swedish film stars, was as much an "unknown" as any girl could be. She was a clerk in a little novelty shop on one of Stockholm's lesser business streets and worked for a wage that left her little money after she provided herself with the bare necessities of life.

Brita was a beautiful as she was poor and more than a few men customers made a regular practice of dropping into the obscure knick-knack shop to buy little things they didn't need and feast their eyes on the girl's pure Nordic beauty. Some of them occasionally made so bold as to invite her to dinner and the theatre, overtures which she courteously but firmly sidestepped.

This shopgirl with the wealth of golden blonde hair, the scarlet lips and the flawless pink and white complexion was unaware of her extraordinary comeliness, so uncommon-sense of it that she had never felt the urge to go into the movies, even as an extra girl.

And she might never have given a film career so much as a thought had not one of her male admirers entered her name in a motion picture contest staged to find an unknown girl possessing the beauty and photographic qualities deemed desirable in Swedish photoplay stars.

News photographers surprised Brita just as she was opening the little shop one morning and asked if they might make a few "shots" of her. She had no idea why she was the object of their attention until one of the cameramen explained to her that she was all unwittingly, one of thousands of good looking young women seeking fame and fortune in the movies.

The newsmen saw at a glance that the modest shopgirl was the type to appeal to movie producers and to the public and they secretly ventured the guess that it was their good luck to discover Sweden's coming movie idol.

They induced Brita to pose for front views and profiles and painted a glamorous picture of her future if she won. They also sent a reporter of their newspaper around to get the story of her rather drab life.

The day the votes were counted, a big limousine came to the little store and took Brita to a movie studio. There she was shown into a sumptuously furnished office where several producers and directors informed her that they were going to make a great movie star of her. They were impressed by her genuine modesty and her rare Scandinavian beauty.

In order to accustom Brita to acting before the camera, they gave her small parts in one or two pictures under production. And she more than came up to their hopes for her. She screened well and could register any mood convincingly.

The shopgirl had been employed at studios only a few weeks when she was given a contract to star in a big picture. She could not believe that anyone was actually going to pay her all the money the contract said, but she was assured that she was worth every cent of her salary and went to work on the film.

The day that Brita's first starring film was shown in Stockholm theatres, critic and movie fans hailed her as the country's new movie queen and predicted that she would some day be the most famous of European movie stars. They are hoping that Hollywood will not be able to lure her from the scene of her sudden rise from obscurity to fame.

Miss Brita Appelgren, the Former Shopgirl, Who Is Now Sweden's Favorite Motion Picture Star.

How We Look at Things

giving a complete image of the object seen, and transmitting it to the brain, which receives it and rearranges it with others in a single view, just as our two eyes produce a single image. But the many eyes of the insect, by their situation on each side of the head, take in with one glance all the extent of space before and behind, above and below, so as not to lose any detail. These insects' eyes are fixed like the head of the animal, and have no need like ours to turn toward the object to be viewed, since they can see it wherever it may be. We know that it is as difficult to catch a butterfly by surprising it from behind as from in front. That is because it sees everywhere at the same time. In this respect the average insect has an indefinitely superiority over man.

All the eyes considered here up to the present have required, in order to see, that objects should be lighted up either by their own light or by that which they receive from outside, however feeble it may be. We have not yet considered eyes themselves lighting up the darkness which they wish to penetrate.

But such eyes exist in nature. A large number of marine animals of the great depths, living in perpetual night, have developed an apparatus for hunting their prey, and possess, in addition to eyes, organs like real lighthouses, furnished with reflectors, which manufacture their own light from bioluminescence, throwing it to a considerable distance, turning it on and putting it out at will, changing its colors, and making use of it not only for lighting purposes, but as signal, to their companions, just as our ships of war use their searchlights.

The mollusks of the group called cephalopods, including some kind of octopi, the squid, etc., are endowed with this singular power in a high degree. Here again we must admit that they are better fitted out than man.

We have so far only given to our ideal being eyes a little more perfected than our own, enabling him to see objects better than we see them, and in a different way. Now, if we prefer, we can give him organs capable of seeing the invisible. There is a whole newand unknown world, of which our sight is ignorant, and yet which we know exists. Can we penetrate it and view it through the eyes?

This is a question which we shall examine in the next article.

The Hearse With Twelve Mourners

THE Orient is famous for the number and splendor of its regal funeral carriages, but nowhere in the East is there a hearse approaching in size and elaborateness of design that owned by the royal family of Siam.

The hearse, which looks like a huge golden boat, was recently used to convey the ashes of His Royal Highness Prince Bhanurangsi, uncle of the king of Siam, to their resting place in the tombs of the royal palace.

The wealth of delicate carving that covers the hearse from its long chassis to the back of the canopy at the top is purely Siamese in character and is said by authorities on Oriental art to be as fine an example of design and execution as can be found anywhere in Asia. Much of the carving is religious symbols.

Whenever a member of the royal family dies the whole country goes into mourning and thousands of subjects follow the funeral procession. They look upon the royal hearse with superstitious awe and believe that if they can touch any part of the ornate vehicle special blessings will come to them.

Prefers Circus Cart To Mansion

PAUL LEINERT, famous all over Europe as the "Human Cannon Ball" has one of the finest villas in Germany. Yet he spends little time in the spacious, comfortable rooms of his home, preferring to live in the brightly painted little wagon that was his only abode for so many years.

It was when Leinert was a mediocre circus acrobat that he got the idea that brought him both fame and fortune the scheme of building a cannon that would use a human being as a projectile. As soon as the big gun was perfected, the owners of the circus advertised "Lienert, the Human Cannon Ball," as their chief attraction, and twice a day thousands gathered under the Big Top to see the ex-acrobat shot from the mouth of a cannon to land safely in a net stretched many feet from the gun's smoking mouth.

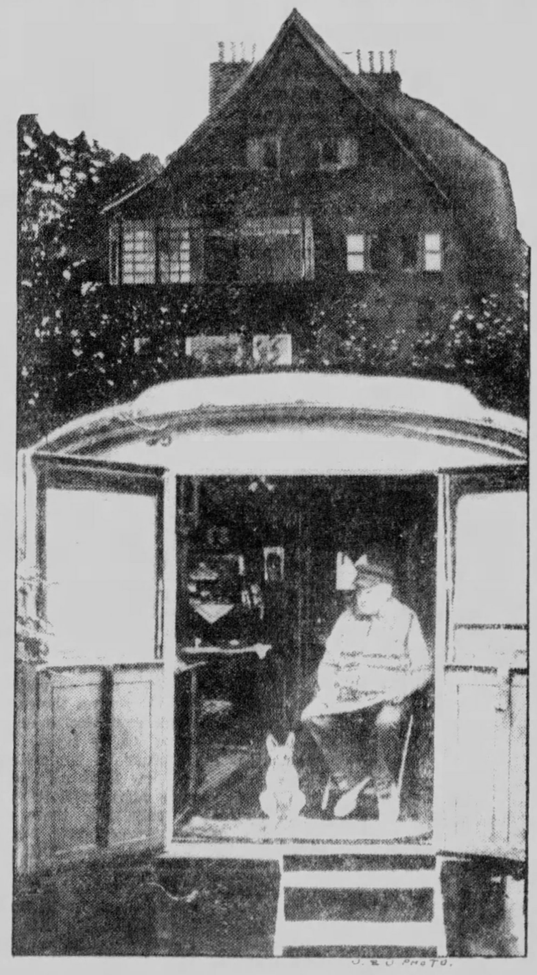
Leinert's fortune kept pace with his growing fame and in a few years he had saved enough money to quit his dangerous job and live in comfort for the rest of his days. He bought a villa not far from Berlin and settled down to live the life of a country gentleman. So long as the circus was in Winter quarters, he didn't mind, but when he knew that the show was ready to go on its round of European cities, he was possessed of an almost irresistible yearning to go back to his old job.

But being more than fifty years old and a little worn out by playing the role of a cannon ball, he realized the folly of going back to the Sawdust Trail and decided to try a novel cure for his Wanderlust. He wrote to the owners of the circus asking them to sell him the little wagon in which he had eaten, slept and traveled for so many years.

Leinert's former employers were more than glad to comply with his request, and the day the cart arrived, the one-time Human Cannon Ball worked until nightfall placing it to his liking at the foot of the high bluff on which his villa stands. When he had the job done he climbed to the house for a few of his effects and returned to the cart to cook his dinner and spend the night.

Since that day Leinert has spent but little time in his palatial home and has been happier than at any time since he quit the Big Top. At first his old German housekeeper and the other two servants who keep his villa in order thought the ex-Human Cannon Ball was losing his mind. But they now understand his eccentricity and appreciate that it is perfectly sane for him to want to live in his old rolling home.

Of course there are times, when Leinert entertains old friends, that he deserts his circus wagon for a few days in order to play the good host. But as soon as there is no longer any necessity for his staying in the villa, he hurries back down the hill to resume life in the gaily painted little wagon which keeps him contented because it helps him to imagine he's back in the circus, thrilling audiences twice a day with the stunt that made him both famous and wealthy.



Paul Leinert, the Original "Human Cannon-Ball," Who, Though Very Wealthy, Cannot Find Comfort in His Three-story Villa Near Berlin, and Therefore Spends His Days and Nights in His Old Circus Coach.

BRIAN, a thoroughbred Irish Wolfhound, owned by J. G. MacKenzie, of Lima, Ohio, isn't the largest dog in the world—that is, not yet. But he is expected to grow into that honor within the next few months because he's only a year-old pup and still has several inches to go before he attains his full growth. At the moment, this monster canine, who is as gentle as a kitten, stands a full seven feet when his trainer holds him in an upright position. Before Brian is two years old, his owner predicts that he will be at least a foot taller than he is today.

Won't Keep Her Weight at 120 Pounds

Miss Helm, Germany's Leading Film Star, Goes to Court to Break Her Contract and Raises in New Form the Old Legal Question of "Shylock's Pound of Flesh"

Miss Brigette Helm, Germany's Most Popular Movie Star, in Her Bathtub Trying to Scale Down a Few Ounces of Weight. Mary Garden Succeeded in Holding Her Weight at 120 Pounds by Swimming Every Day This Summer in the Mediterranean Without the Inconvenience of a Bathing Suit.

Another Photograph of Miss Helm.

SHYLOCK, in Shakespeare's "Merchant of Venice," had a perfectly good, legal contract, calling for a pound of flesh, but he was unable to collect, for a good reason.

U. F. A., Germany's big moving picture producing company, has an iron-clad, strictly legal contract with Brigette Helm, known as the "Duse of the films," in which they have the right to demand, and they do demand, the immediate removal of every pound of her flesh above the specified maximum of 120 pounds.

Miss Helm has asked the German Supreme Court to declare that weight clause null and void for the very same reason that caused Shylock to lose his case. In Shakespeare's drama, Portia raised the technicality that removing the pound of flesh would also cost some life-blood; precisely the thing that the film star proposes to show by testimony of physicians and laboratory blood experts will happen if the movie company is to have its pound or two of her flesh.

The legal principle behind Portia's technicality has always been accepted as sound law. No court, in any civilized land today, would enforce a contract that called for killing or maiming a human being. It would be thrown out as contrary to public policy. So, though two preliminary actions have gone against her, if she can prove that starvation and other heroic treatment necessary to remove the extra pounds, actually dries up and makes anemic her life-blood, she may well win her case. This would set a precedent that would be heard around the world and might set free the "diet slaves" of Hollywood, where more than one beauty has given her life with her pound of flesh.

The German star prays the courts to also annul another quite common clause. This gives the company the power to select the stories and characters which are to be her vehicles, provided they are suitable. Again the company, in a strictly legal sense, is entirely in the right. The roles it has chosen have been suitable enough in the business sense meant when that contract was written—that is they are parts which Miss Helm has been able to act with great brilliancy and have proved successful at the box office.

But they have run to vamp roles which Miss Helm complains are now on the point of either ruining her nerves or her morals. The main difficulty seems to be that the actress is by nature a respectable, domestic type of woman whose ideal in life is to be modest and decent, loving only one man and remaining true to him till death. To be an actress of such dramatic power as Miss Helm exhibits means to think and feel a part. Therefore, to play the part of a bad woman as intensely and sincerely as she does, means that this naturally good woman must think, feel, and, to all intents and purposes, be a bad woman at heart, until the last scene has been taken.

Then, she says, comes a mental conflict, during which she throws all those wrong ideas and wicked feelings out of her system and climbs back to her natural, nice-girl poise. Hardly has she recovered herself and while still mentally out of breath, than the company throws another vamp manuscript at her and knocks Miss Helm down into the abyss again.

Nerve specialists will testify that each time she throws herself into the bad woman character, it wears the nerve paths which govern habits or thought a little deeper in her brain, until like a car in the deepening rut, there will soon come a time when she cannot get out. She claims that the time has now come and she can no longer stand the strain. If any more vamp parts are forced on her she must either abandon her natural respectable self and become a vamp character in private as well as public or suffer a nervous breakdown.

Interesting Photograph of Brigette Helm, Which Shows Quite Plainly Her Thin Arms and Slender Figure.

On this point neither Shakespeare nor anyone else offers much precedent in her favor. She can no doubt show the court that many actresses have become the real thing off-stage. But that is a hazard that goes with the profession just as the possibility of getting drowned goes with joining the navy.

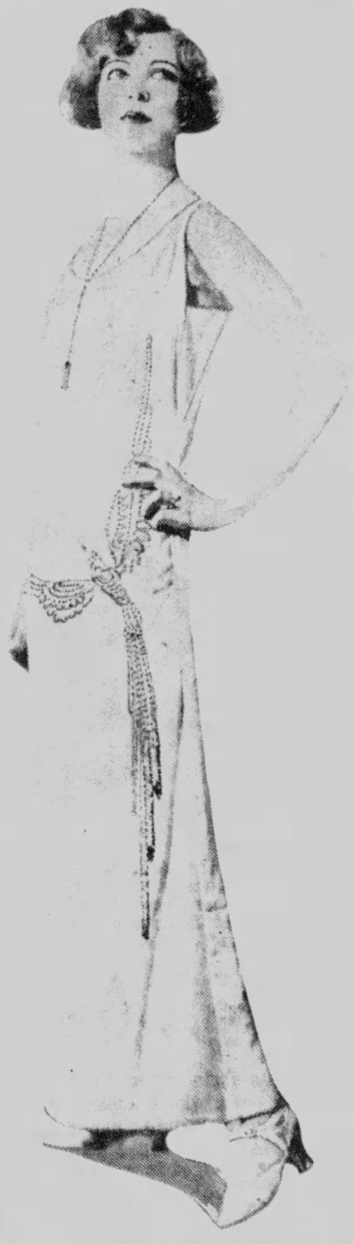
All by itself there seems small chance that any court would find reason for voiding that clause. However, taken in conjunction with the "pound of flesh" clause, it may be different. She may convince the court that it is not fair to ask a woman to face this moral peril unless she is allowed three square meals a day. As Jane Addams, the famous settlement worker has pointed out, it is hopeless to talk morals to a hungry woman.

The U. F. A. really ought to have subpoenaed Mary Garden to give expert and personal testimony on the question of weight and morals. The Chicago grand opera prima donna recently returned to this country with the announcement that she was at 120 pounds, exactly the limit in Miss Helm's contract. Miss Garden explained that she had kept her weight down largely by nude bathing in the Mediterranean and made no complaint that it bothered her morals.

That bathing required the presence of a male Italian boatman, 70 years old. At that age his morals, if any, had presumably crystallized, but when the old man was sick his eighteen-year-old son took over the job of helping Miss Garden bathe. What effect this method of weight reduction may have had on his morals would be irrelevant and immaterial as far as the legal aspects of Miss Helm's case are concerned. It was noticed and much commented on that the weight reduction or something had apparently affected Miss Garden's eyesight because she was entirely unable to see Madame Maria Jeritza, the great Metropolitan song bird, who was a fellow passenger on the steamer. But then Maria couldn't see Mary either—so that does not prove much.

As the suit is to be heard in a European court, the celebrated case will no doubt be cited of the Baroness Henri de Rothschild, the extremely rich woman who died of a condition of the digestive tract known in France as "poor man's disease." About ten years before her death, the Baroness, a naturally healthy and robust as well as a handsome woman, began to take on a little more flesh than was stylish. There is no pound of flesh clause in any marriage contract and no woman can be divorced for getting fat. But the Baron had often praised his wife's figure and she started dieting, at first under direction of physicians. The doctors, with due regard for their patient's health, were not drastic enough to suit her, so she took advice from actresses and dancers, trying all sorts of things.

Finally she came to the conclusion which most figure-dieters reach in the end, that if one had a strong natural tendency to plumpness there is no way to keep thin except by starvation almost to the point of death. So this immensely rich woman of the old banking family forced herself to live on a quantity of food that was equalled in stinginess only by a few down-and-out tramps of Europe and the half-starved natives of some parts of India, where every year more mouths are born than can possibly be fed.



Miss Allyn King, Who Reduced to This Degree of Thinness by Six Years of Starvation Diet—And Paid for It by a Year in a Sanitarium.

Once in a while such victims of slow starvation fall dead in the streets of European capitals and are brought to the morgue. Dissection shows that their stomachs have shrunk to a size that could not hold even a small fraction of a square meal, and that various other organs and tissues have changed and shrunken pitifully. The condition is called "poor man's disease" and was common enough during the dark ages, but in recent times has become rare because few people are so poor in Europe or America that they are half-starved for long periods.

After ten years of voluntary starvation, such as would send a man to prison if he inflicted it on a horse, the Baroness' nerves and general health became so bad that she realized she must build herself up with real food or die. But, to everyone's dismay, it was found that her stomach no longer would tolerate more than a few spoonfuls of food, and that these took as much time to digest as would a hearty meal in a normal stomach.

The Late Baroness Henri de Rothschild, Possibly the Richest Woman in All Europe, Who Dieted Herself to Death.

In a hospital, surrounded by doctors, nurses and every care that wealth could buy, one of the richest women of the world died, starving in the midst of plenty. An autopsy revealed that her stomach had shriveled until it could expand only to about the size of a small lemon. With such a shrinkage always goes a loss of capacity to secrete the necessary gastric juices and muscular power to perform the churning movements of digestion.

The U. F. A. Company can introduce depositions from the United States, showing that their weight clause might be severer. For instance, the following is a standard clause inserted in contracts of many high-priced beauties of the American stage and screen:

"It is expressly made a part of this agreement, and is an essential term hereof, that if at any time during the term of the said agreement you should increase in weight more than 16 pounds, or decrease in weight more than 10 pounds, or let the dimensions of any part of your figure vary more than one half inch (½ inch) from the following:

"Weight, 115 pounds.
Neck, 12½.
Bust, 34.
Upper arm, 11.
Lower arm, 7½.
Waist, 26.
Hips, 34.
Thigh, 18.
Calf, 12.
Ankle, 8½.

Then, and in that event, we shall have the right to cancel this contract upon giving to you one week's notice in writing, and upon such notice being given, then this contract and all the terms thereof shall come to an end, and each of us declared to be free from any and all liability hereunder."

To this Miss Helm can reply by pointing out the wreck and ruin caused by trying to fulfil those very contracts. She has already partly answered it by asserting that such cruelty is no longer a box office necessity. The style of torturing the female form divine out of its natural curves into the unnatural straight lines of an undeveloped boy, has already begun to pass, according to news from many quarters. Such authorities as Clayton and Waller, British producers of "Silver Wings"; the management of the "Follies" in New York, and the great dressmakers of Paris have agreed that the properly upholstered feminine figure is on its way back because of popular demand.

There was Miss Allyn King, prima donna of the "Follies," who kept her figure down to contract specifications for six years and paid for it with a year in a sanitarium where the doctors brought her back from the grave, inch by inch. The list is long—Nita Naldi, motion picture actress, Anna Fitziu of the Chicago Civic Opera, Emily Stevens, dramatic actress, and many others.

The beautiful film star Katherine Grant, who was Miss Los Angeles in the 1922 Atlantic City pageant, thought she could live on spinach, tomatoes and orange juice indefinitely. When the inevitable crash came, the doctors, beside the usual shrunken stomach and anemia, were faced with a mental difficulty. In order to endure the self-imposed torture Miss Grant had developed her will to a point where it became a fixed idea to refuse food. She now knew she must eat or die, but her jaws locked involuntarily when the nurse lifted the spoon to her lips.

Molly O'Day, pretty little Hollywood star, found herself in the predicament of reducing or having her contract cancelled. Molly was smart enough to see that diet alone would not bring results without fatal starvation, and, in despair, she got the beauty surgeons to remove some of the fat on the operating table. But, alas, it soon came back.

Miss Joan LaCoste, the Pretty Daredevil of the Auto Speedways, Who Turned Burglar After She Had Spent the Thousands of Dollars Prize Money Won by Auto Racing.

Miss LaCoste Accomplishing a Daring Leap From a Speeding Auto at Daytona Beach, Florida. Her Iron Nerve Failed Her, However, When She Was Caught in a Chicago Hotel by Her Intended Victim, Whom She Had Attempted to Rob With a Toy Pistol.

CHICAGO police, accustomed to dealing with girl gunmen, were surprised to receive as a visitor at their headquarters, one Tuesday last week, a girl who was not only a beautiful young woman, but a well-known figure in the sporting world of Chicago's Black Hawk.

She was Joan LaCoste, who, the police knew, had been the constant escort of Thomas Rust, and they politely asked Rust's friend to explain Mrs. Rust's desire to post with $1,000 a guest. Miss LaCoste explained to the officers in charge of fraud cases that she was an unsophisticated burglar, actuated through love for the wife of a bootlegging racketeer, Thomas Rust.

For years, she told the police, the girl's story and it proved her the sweet girl graduate of the rackets," but persistent questioning revealed that "Mrs. Thomas Rust" was none other than Joan LaCoste, well known daredevil of the auto race track, who once drove an automobile 151 miles an hour at Daytona Beach, Florida. Joan gave her real name, but begged to be cleared so she wouldn't disgrace her father and mother in Memphis. To save embarrassment they would both of finding themselves the parents of a burglar.

Joan explained to the police that she had arrived in Chicago with $1,400 prize money that she had won by her nerve and skill behind the wheel of a racing car. Then she contracted pneumonia, and before she had recovered her health most of her savings had gone for the doctor's bills and medicine. With what little money she had left she planned to take flying lessons, but before she had even begun to add aviation to her accomplishments as a race driver her pocketbook held a lone $5 bill.

In this lowly financial condition she chanced to meet an acquaintance, Hyman Bobbe, to whom she explained her plight. He sympathized with the girl and told her he would be glad to help her if he had as much money as his brother Joseph.

There was more talk of well-to-do Brother Joseph, in the course of which mention was made of Mrs. Bobbe's jewels. These, apparently, suggested to the daredevil of the speedways an easy way out of her financial difficulties, for it was a few days later that she knocked at the door of Rebecca Bobbe's apartment in the fashionable Chicago Beach Hotel. The instant Mrs. Bobbe opened the door the novice bandit pushed her way into the room and thrust what looked like an automatic pistol against her intended victim's side.

"Don't scream or make a noise and you'll be safe," advised the bandit, observing the array of gems Mrs. Bobbe was wearing at the time.

But, instead of losing her nerve, Mrs. Bobbe grappled with her uninvited guest and shouted at the top of her voice. Several guests in nearby rooms came on the run and seized the girl bandit. She was held a prisoner until the police arrived.

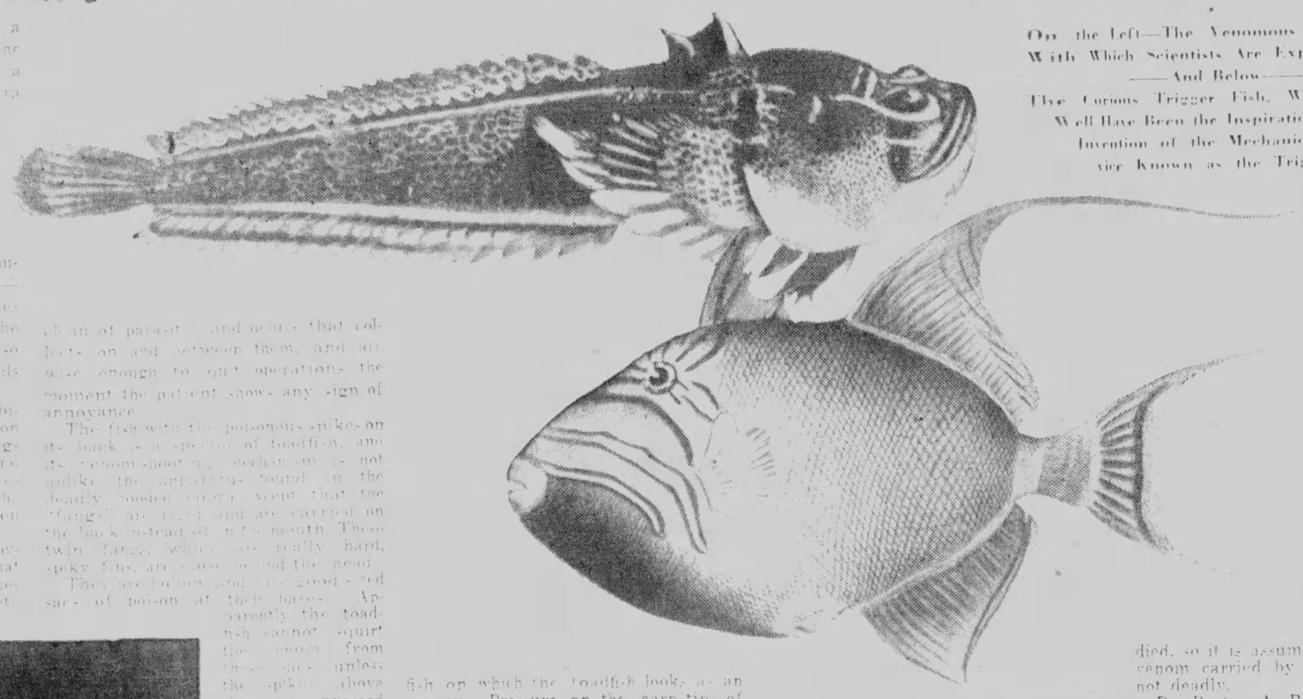
After the grilling that revealed her as Joan LaCoste, nationally known automobile racer, instead of "Mrs. Thomas Rust," the name she gave police to cover her identity, Joan was locked up in a cell to await a hearing before Judge Francis Borrelli. And when this magistrate ordered her held in $25,000 bonds for appearance before the Grand Jury on a charge of attempted robbery, Joan, being no hardy product of the half-world, fell in a faint.

"I suppose," said the judge, after the pretty prisoner had regained consciousness and her poise, "that you think I'm a terrible person."

"Not at all," replied the girl from the speedway. "Duty is duty. But how horrible for my family! I tried so hard to keep my name a secret, but I guess there's nothing to do now except take my medicine."

Joan was placed on trial a few days later, and her "medicine" was a sentence of from one to fourteen years in Joliet Penitentiary. Joan collapsed when she heard sentence passed, but a few days later she was informed that sentence had been suspended.

Weird and Poisonous Fishes Found in the Florida Waters



On the Left—The Venomous Toad Fish With Which Scientists Are Experimenting. —And Below— The Curious Trigger Fish, Which Might Well Have Been the Inspiration for the Invention of the Mechanical Device Known as the Trigger.

WHEN Dr. W. H. Longley, a scientist, connected with the Carnegie Institution, put on a diving suit, strapped on a camera specially designed for underwater photography, and ventured forth on a long expedition over the ocean floor off the Florida coast, he had only a single idea of the wonders to be seen there.

The most interesting of these wonders are curious and dangerous fish—creatures with poison-shooting spikes on their backs, fins that work like the trigger of a pistol, and scaly armor so stout that only the gills, lips and tails are flexible.

In addition to these strange inhabitants of the sea, Dr. Longley came upon a fish that lives in a pit, which it digs for itself, and lines with pebbles and bits of shell. When this fish retires into its submarine lair it covers the entrance with a stone as a protection against intruders.

And most curious of all, he discovered schools of queer little fish that play the role of dentist to many species of larger fish. They pick the teeth clean of parasites, and feed that collects on and between them, and are wise enough to quit operations the moment the patient shows any sign of annoyance.

The fish with the poisonous spikes on its back is a species of toadfish, and its venom-shooting mechanism is not unlike the apparatus found in the deadly cobra, except that the "fangs" are fixed and are carried on the back instead of in the mouth. These twin fangs, which are really hard, spiky fins, are close to and the head.

There are hollow and well-developed sacs of poison at their bases. Apparently the toadfish cannot squirt the venom from these sacs unless the spikes above them are pressed firmly against something, which is usually another fish on which the toadfish looks as an enemy. Pressure on the sharp tips of the spikes causes them to push against the poison sacs, shooting out the poison with great force.

There are two cases on record of swimmers who have been attacked by the toadfish. Neither of the victims died, so it is assumed that the venom carried by the fish is not deadly.

Dr. Barton A. Bean, of the Smithsonian Institution, experimented with a specimen that had been preserved in alcohol for thirty years, to learn whether the venom remained. He took care, however, to avoid possible danger. The venom was still there and squirted out to a distance of three feet.

Not the sort of fish to fool with carelessly. So far as known, the effect of its poison is not likely to be fatal, but a wound inflicted by the spines is very painful, and produces secondary symptoms, including fever, such as those that follow the sting of a large scorpion.

The trigger fish, another strange creature that Dr. Longley found in Florida waters, gets its name from the curious way in which the first two spikes in its smaller dorsal fin interlock and release.

Ordinarily this fin is relaxed, but when the fish erects it, the lower end of the second spike fits into a notch in the base of the foremost spike much the same as the steel trigger of a gun is "cocked." No amount of pressure on the front spike will spring the catch, but a slight downward push on the spike behind it releases it and it drops.

The Famous Indo-Italian Fakir Blakamann, Who Was Suffocated When Buried Alive in an Argentine Theatre.

MANY swarthy fakirs have come out of the East to thrill Occidental strangers of the Western World with their death-defying stunts, particularly the trick of having themselves nailed up in coffins and buried alive, or submerged in water for hours and, in some cases, days.

Blakamann, an Indo-Italian fakir, had the ambition of spending more hours in the narrow confines of a sealed coffin than any of his fellow mystics, when he brought his act to Argentine city for a week's appearance in one of the theatres.

On the opening night of the show the house was packed, eager for the thrill of seeing Blakamann placed in a casket and buried for fifteen minutes in a huge box of earth in the center of the stage. But no one in the audience expected as much thrill as the fakir gave them—for he suffocated and was dead when the coffin was dug up so the audience could marvel at the man's seemingly supernatural powers.

Their master had done the trick so many times before that his devoted assistants could not believe their eyes when Blakamann failed to revive as the coffin lid was opened. Frantically they worked over his limp body, pumping his arms up and down and slapping his ashen face.

At first the audience thought the frenzied behavior of the fakir's attendants was a part of the act intended to accentuate the thrill of seeing a man come back from a situation that would have meant death to anyone but the few masters of the trick of suspended animation. But when the dark-skinned assistants gave up their ministrations and fell to wailing their grief to Allah, the audience knew that the trick had failed and that the great Blakamann had come back from the grave for the last time.

JOAN GUTH, student, and Collene Kemp, twenty, recently sat in their little apartment in Chicago and made what seemed to them a workable plan to see the country and make money while they traveled from Canada to the Gulf of Mexico and from the Atlantic to the Pacific. They jauntily called themselves the "girl tramps," although they had no intention of going rigged or begging handouts at backdoors. Their scheme was to sell magazine subscriptions.

Several weeks later they found themselves in Washington, but they took little, if any, interest in the sights of the Capital because their pocketbooks and their stomachs were empty and few people had been found who wanted to subscribe to the publications they represented.

Joan and Collene decided then and there that the life of a tramp, even a genteel tramp, is not so good and they applied to the Travelers' Aid Society for something to eat and the price of two tickets to Chicago.

Back in Chicago the "girl tramps" again went into conference and decided to abandon their idea of seeing the country until they can devise some scheme that seems to have a better chance of success than their last one.

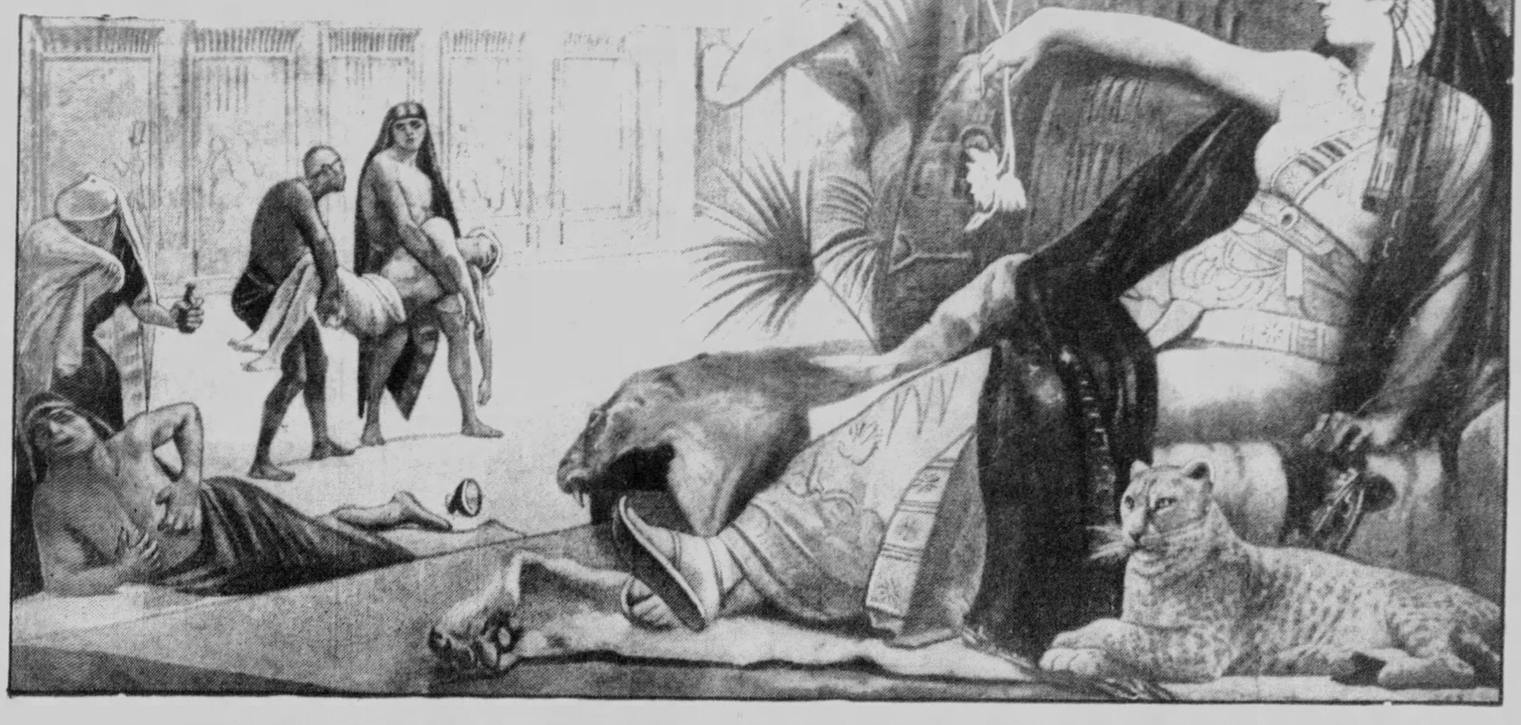
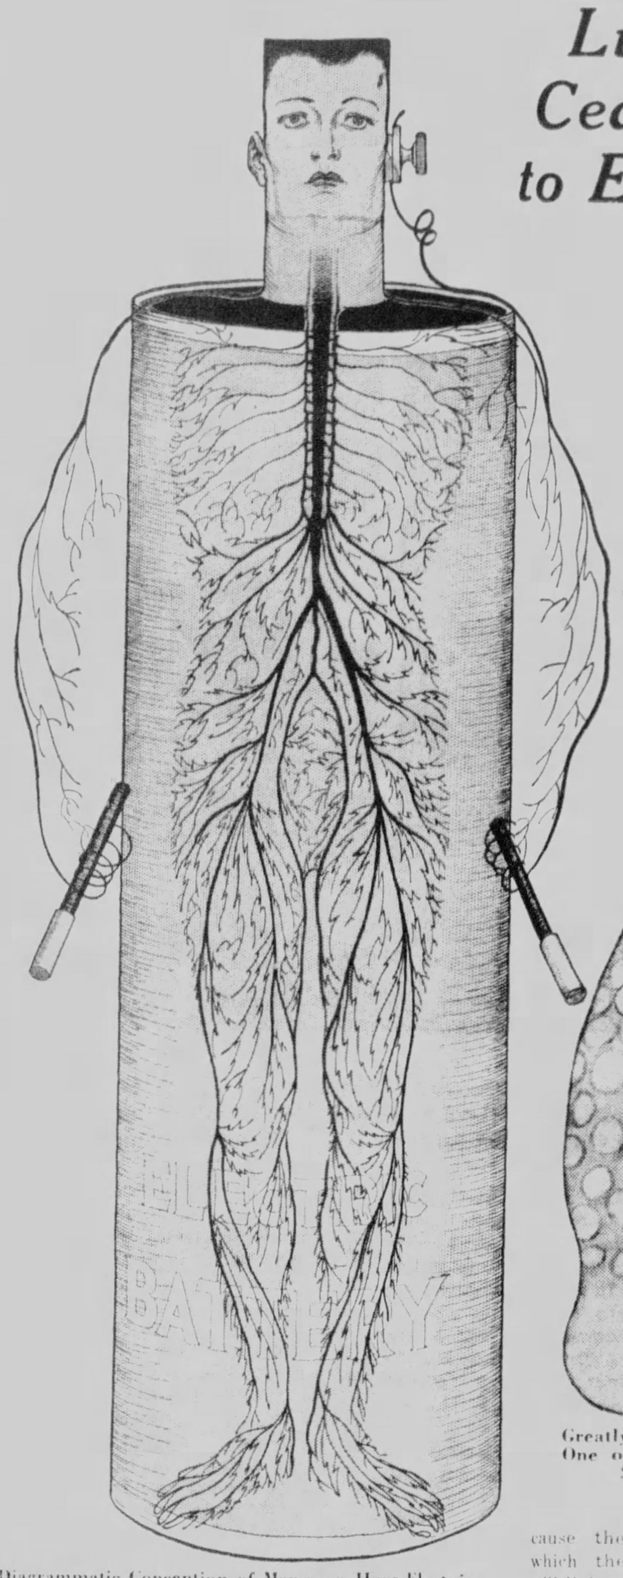
What Really Happens When We Die

Science Finds That Each of the Billions of Living Cells in the Body Is a Tiny Electric Battery and When Enough of These Run Down, Life Ceases to Exist

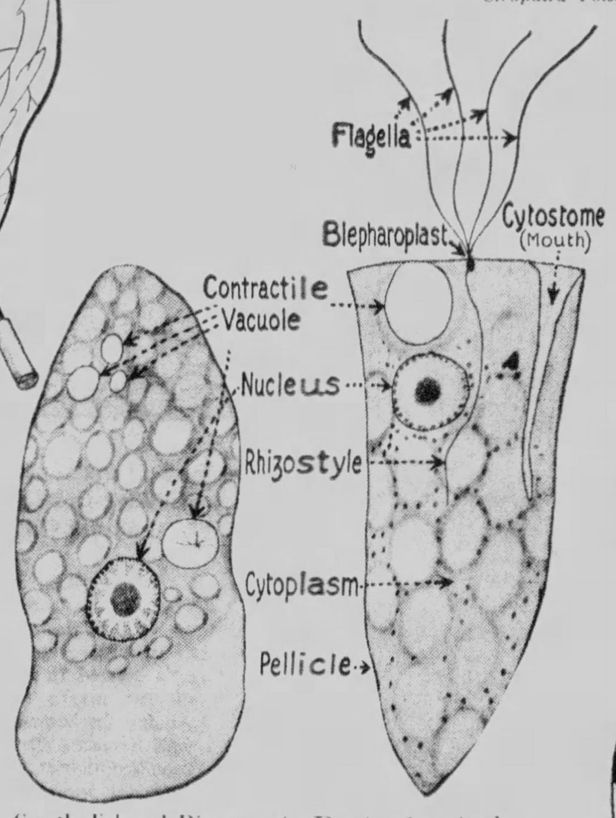


"Cleopatra Poisoning Her Slaves," from the Famous Painting by Alexander Cabanel. In This Heartless Manner the Egyptian Siren Experimented With Death to Observe the Effects of Various Fatal Potions.

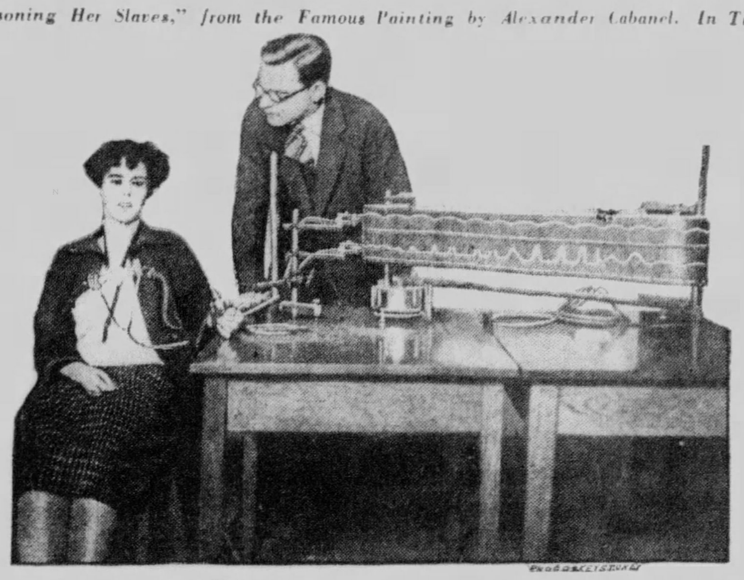
Modern Scientific Experiments With Death Have Revealed That Each Living Cell Is a Tiny Electric Battery and That Death Occurs When Certain Vital Cell-Batteries Cease to Generate Life-Giving Electricity.



Diagrammatic Conception of Man as a Huge Electric attery. Dr. George W. Crile, the Famous Cleveland Scientist, Has Found That Every Living Body Is a Collection of Tiny Batteries and Each of the Billions of Cells in the Human Body Is a Separate Battery.



Greatly Enlarged Diagrammatic Drawing of an Ameba, One of the Simplest of Creatures. Each Ameba Is a Separate Cell and a Tiny Electric Battery, Dr. Crile Discovered.



Because the Human Body Is Made Up of Billions of Minute Electric Batteries, It Is Highly Susceptible to the Most Delicate Electrical Apparatus. Here Is an Electro-Cardiograph Being Used as a "Lie Detector." It Records the Faintest Tremor of the Heart Muscles When the Subject Fails to Adhere to the Strict Truth.

Microphoto of Experiment With Living Cells Such as Were Conducted by Dr. Crile in Proving That Each Cell Is a Tiny Battery. The Points of the Scientist's Minute Probes Are Seen at Each Side of the Photo.

LIFE is electricity. Each living cell is a tiny electric battery. A human body, composed of billions of these living units, is but a great pile of batteries operating the body's workshops, keeping themselves and the body which they compose in order by virtue of electric forces chemically maintained, like the electric forces inside the dry battery of a flashlight.

So believes Dr. George W. Crile, of Cleveland, Ohio, one of America's most distinguished surgeons and biologists. In the laboratories of the Cleveland Clinic, the same institution where an explosion of X-ray film caused such death and havoc a few months ago, Dr. Crile and his assistants have been studying for years the relations between life and electricity.

A tiny ameba, microscopic creature of muddy ditch water and believed to be one of the lowest forms of life, has been explored throughout its living body with an electric probe. An electric battery has been constructed out of halves of living apples. As soon as the apple tissue died the electricity ceased.

When death occurs, Dr. Crile believes, whether it be the death of a single microscopic cell or of the great assemblage of such cells that we call a human being, it is because the electric potential that kept life going has ceased. The life-battery has run down, like that of a flash light that has been used too much or laid away too long inactively on the shelf. This life electricity, Dr. Crile told the last meeting of the century-old American Philosophical Society in Philadelphia, is his best definition of life itself.

Both life and death the biologists have always had great difficulty in defining. After a person is dead many parts of the body, it has been proved, remain alive for hours or days. Hair and nails grow longer after death because the cells from which they grow are still living. Cells of the liver, biologists have proved, probably live longer after death than any other large group of cells. If living cells are removed from the apparently dead body to which they belonged, they can be kept alive for months or years in proper culture solutions. This has been proved, among many other experimenters, by Dr. Alexis Carrel in New York City, by the late Dr. T. S. P. Strangeways in England and by Dr. L. Policard in France.

In Russia, Dr. S. J. Tchechulin kept the severed head of a dog apparently alive for more than three hours. His colleague, Dr. A. Kubliako, kept a human heart alive outside the body that once had owned it for at least thirty hours and probably, so far as some of its cells were concerned, for several hours longer. Recently at the International Physiological Congress at Boston, Dr. Eusebio A. Hernandez, of Paris, proposed that scientists establish an international laboratory for the study of this mysterious matter of death.

In explaining death, scientific men have not progressed much farther than to say that it is the nature of living creatures to die.

None of the various theories of scientists provides, however, any answer to the question of what life and death really are. That is what Dr. Crile believes he has found in his electric-battery theory. There is much other evidence, too, that electricity, if not actually the cause of life or the same thing as life, is intimately related to it.

Years ago, Professor W. J. V. Osterhout of Harvard, then working on the Pacific Coast, proved that little disks of living tissue cut from the fronds of sea weeds and immersed in sea water are remarkably sensitive to the passage of electric currents. A small electric voltage will make these sea-weed cells shrink or swell or undergo various chemical changes. Chemical changes, on the other hand, alter the electric characters of the sea-weed cells.

That measurable voltages exist inside living cells both of plants and animals has been established by extensive experiments by Dr. Carl Voegtlin and Dr. Floyd De Eds of the United States Public Health Service, in Washington. Dr. F. M. Lehmann, of Berlin, even discovered that a thunderstorm passing over his laboratory affected the rate of growth of the tiny, microscopic animalcules called paramecia which were growing and multiplying in cultures in his incubators, doubtless as a result of the effects of electric charges induced inside the bodies of these tiny animals like the charges which thunderstorms induce in nearby electric wiring or in radio receivers.

To all this evidence of life-electricity an assistant of Dr. Crile, Dr. Maria Telkes, added the proof of actual measurement. Taking a single ameba, an animalcule still tinier than the paramecia which were affected by thunderstorms in Dr. Lehmann's laboratory, Dr. Telkes thrust into the body of this microscopic creature a minute electric probe; a minature duplicate of the probe rods which electricians sometimes use in conduit manholes in city streets to see whether everything is correct about the charges on the electric wires below.

The electric potential of the ameba, Dr. Crile told the American Philosophical Society, was found to be sometimes as high as fifteen thousandths of a volt; a very small electric pressure as men count such things, but large when the minute size of the ameba is taken into account. Were a man electrified in the same proportion to his size, there would be a difference of more than ninety volts between his head and his feet. This electric voltage of the tiny creature changes, Dr. Telkes found, when the strength of the culture solution in which the ameba is resting is altered. Changes of temperature affect it. Anesthetics, gland chemicals like adrenalin, other chemicals, exposure of the ameba to light—all change the little creature's electric voltage just as such things might change the comfort or well-being of a man.

By a suitable arrangement of the microscopic lenses, the animalcule could be observed while its internal electric voltage was being read. "Of special interest and importance," Dr. Crile told the Philosophical Society, "were the effects of changes in potential produced by the direct application of an electric charge which could be varied at will. When the charge was increased the potential arose and the ameba became more active.

"On the other hand, when the potential was diminished by leading in a current the direction of which was opposed to that in the ameba, the ameba progressively became less active, withdrew its pseudopodia (which are its substitutes for legs), rounded up into a quiescent lump. When the potential reached zero or went over to the negative side, the ameba disintegrated first into larger then into smaller granules and fragments and finally disappeared in the suspending solution."

If the ameba's electrocution in this way was stopped just at the proper instant, before the final disintegration had occurred, it was possible, Dr. Crile reported, to have the little creature recover.

"This crucial experiment indicates," he said, "that the fundamental control of the molecular integrity and the activity of the ameba; this difference between life and activity and death and dissolution, was governed by the change in the electric potential which was altered at will. Activity, quiescence, death and dissolution were governed completely by the variation in potential alone."

Thus did the first amebas to be electrocuted for the sake of science, or at least the first of them to have their electrocutions watched, contribute, perhaps, to better understanding of the greatest secret of life.

With the cells of living apples Dr. Crile and his assistants had similar experiences, for the cells of an apple are almost always alive when the fruit is bought and eaten. If these cells die, indeed, the apple promptly rots. Exploring the apple cells with tiny electric probes like the one used in the body of the ameba, Dr. Crile's assistants found similar electric voltages, amounting to a few thousandths of a volt between the two sides of a cell or between one cell and another. Halves of apples laid out on the table and connected to each other by wires able to conduct electricity produced, Dr. Crile states, a veritable electric battery with a potential of about one volt. Correspondence was found, too, between the electric potential of the apple cells and one of the most universal and important attributes of life, that of breathing.

So long as apples and other living materials are alive, they must breathe. Even the tiny ameba underneath the microscope is breathing continually, its life-giving oxygen being absorbed through the surface of its jelly-like body from the small amount of oxygen gas dissolved in the water. The rate of breathing of a larger living object, like an apple, can be measured by chemical means and Dr. Crile's research staff proceeded to compare this with the electric potential measured at the same time.

Always, it was found, the breathing of the apple and the measured electric potential of its cells changed at the same time and in the same way. When a little of the gland chemical called adrenalin was injected into the apple the breathing of the apple was first decreased and then increased, for these gland chemicals are often as potent toward the living tissues of plants as they are toward those of a human being. While the breathing of the apple cells was showing this adrenalin-caused dance their electric potential behaved similarly. First it fell, then it rose.

Apples are not "active" in the sense that amebas or human being are, activity shown by moving about. But if the activity of a living apple be taken as indicated by the rate at which its tissues breathe, which biologists agree is a very good index, then Dr. Crile's apples behaved just as his amebas had done. When the apples' electric potentials were higher the breathing rates were higher also. When the electric potentials fell the apples breathed more slowly. When the electric potential fell to zero breathing stopped altogether. Then the apple cells, measured by whatever test the scientists could devise, were dead.

One of the most remarkable of Dr. Crile's results on the relation between electric potential and life activity is in connection with in-omnia. Sleep is sometimes called a close relative of death. Instead, Dr. Crile's results show, it is a restorer of life. It is insomnia that is death-like. If an animal is kept awake and if the electric potential of that animal's living cells is measured at intervals, this potential gradually sinks. Finally, it, too, sinks to zero. Then the animal is dead from lack of sleep.

Just how the electric forces which Dr. Crile believes that he has detected in living cells act to produce what men call life, or to be what men call life, it is still not possible to explain with full assurance. Somehow, Dr. Crile believes, the use of oxygen by living cells is bound up in the matter, for it is this which is characteristic of breathing. This oxygen, by taking part in some chemical process in the cells, seems to maintain their electric voltage, as though an electric dry battery could breathe in air from time to time and keep up its electric charge continually despite daily use.

It is possible, too, that the duty of the electric charges which Dr. Crile refers to is to keep the various parts of the cell together or apart, so that it will be a working unit and not a mere mass of disordered machinery. For all that living cells are too tiny to be seen except under the most powerful microscopes, they are believed by the biologists to contain complicated chemical and mechanical structures—veritable miniature factories where all the many activities of life are carried on.

Different things may go on inside the same cell. Yet the cell has no visible walls or partitions inside it. It seems to be merely a sack of jelly-like material with some threads and tiny lumps of harder, darker material scattered here and there. It is difficult to see how so small and partitionless a workroom could house so many different kinds of work, especially of chemical work, without getting them mixed.

That, perhaps, is the duty of the electric charges; holding one part of the cell or one job that is going on there apart from other parts and other jobs, as a charge of electricity on a head of hair will make each hair stand out separately from its fellows, like bristles trying to get as far from each other as possible. At least it is certain, Dr. Crile believes, that when the electric voltage of the cell stops, the jobs inside the cell do get mixed.

This loss of the electric essence, by poisons, by injury or merely by wearing out, is what he believes to constitute the great mystery of death. As long as a human being is alive he is electric. When he dies the electricity is gone. Whether vital electricity that is leaking away can be insulated and retained, as electricity is, and whether new electric charges can be supplied to dying cells or dying bodies to keep them alive; whether dynamos and batteries and meters are to become the weapons of physicians and the conquerors of death, these are things about which neither Dr. Crile nor any other expert has anything to say. But perhaps nothing is impossible.

Cecelia G. Wyckoff, Who Was Recently So Completely Vindicated and Upheld by the Courts in Her Personal Affairs, Refuses to Discuss the Matter at Her Office, No. 42 Broadway, But Gave Some Interesting and Valuable Stock Market Advice Instead

Miss Margaret Shotwell, Known as the "Cigarette Princess," Who Inherited a Million Dollars Recently in Excellent Tobacco Stock, but Lost It All and $50,000 Besides in the Recent Wall Street Slump.

Mrs. Wyckoff and Her Two Charming Daughters in the Garden of Her Long Island Country Estate.

CECELIA G. WYCKOFF, the best informed woman in America on values of stocks and bonds, discussed the other day recent events in Wall Street, and offered some interesting and valuable advice on the stock market. Mrs. Wyckoff has a sympathetic and very kindly human personality, cheerfully giving her time and the results of her wide knowledge and experience for the benefit of those to whom stock market advice might be helpful.

"What chance has the ordinary person of making money in the stock market?" was asked Mrs. Wyckoff, who is the sole owner and publisher of the well-known Magazine of Wall Street, which is widely read by the millionaires and captains of industry who ponder the statistical reports and are influenced by the advice, suggestions and warnings of the editorials. Mrs. Wyckoff is herself an able financier and for many months has warned the readers of her magazine of the impending danger of the crash which came early in November. In view of of all that has happened in the financial world in recent weeks and the new element of women investors in the Wall Street market, the advice and suggestions of Mrs. Wyckoff are of especial interest at this time.

"If you mean what chance does a speculator have," said Mrs. Wyckoff in reply to the question, "the answer is that the great majority of speculators lose in the long run. The only sound basis for income and profit is to buy sound income-bearing securities outright. You can't get rich over night."

"But how can one pick the stocks that will increase in value?"

"By considering the earnings, past history, prospects, nature of a corporation's business—whether it deals in luxuries or necessities, diversification of its products, and so forth. The best way to learn all this is through some organization which has no interest in selling stocks, and which employs trained and experienced economists and business experts.

"Investment education is necessary to enable the public to distinguish between facts and propaganda. An intelligent investing public is the greatest thing in the world as a stabilizer for the market and the greatest guarantee of continued prosperity. A large number of the vast hordes who were playing the market had very little idea what they were holding—whether it was a railroad or a bank. They were absolutely uninterested in what lay behind the stocks; they bought on tips, hunches and gossip."

"How can one be kept out of trouble when buying stocks?"

"By not purchasing on margin and not buying on tips. Tips received from friends or professional tipsters. The profit on your first tip is your greatest misfortune. After that you ignore the fundamental background of securities, which is the only basis on which to build a fortune."

"But of course some persons make money by their speculation?"

"There are a few, yes, but it is impossible to draw any useful lesson from them. Nobody knows whether or not the successful speculator of today will keep his money. The big stock manipulators have often lost their entire fortunes. They are the persons who are the greatest disseminators of stock market propaganda. You can count on your fingers the few of the greatest ones who have ever come back from defeat."

"Should a person of small means buy common stocks?"

"It is debatable not to make purchases of common stocks until you can buy an equal amount of bonds or preferred stocks. But investment common stocks offer the best opportunity of growing rich and sharing in the future development of the country. Common stocks represent the ownership and control of our prosperous and growing industries. Bonds and other fixed income-bearing securities derive no benefit from future development. The United States Steel Corporation and other great corporations have paid up their bonds and so bondholders who have helped to finance these great industries derive no profit other than the interest on their investment. However, they possess safety of principal which is an important factor for a portion of everyone's funds."

"What started the recent widespread interest in stocks?"

"I have seen Wall Street change from a comparatively simple affair with a few important stocks listed on the exchange to the complex and enormous thing it is today," Mrs. Wyckoff replied. "It is not surprising that the public in general should be interested in securities when they find their favorite breakfast food or soft drink on the list. And when you consider the long bull market, the optimism and much advertised prosperity of the past five years, it is easy to understand the great interest in stocks by the general public."

"How can an investor know when the time is favorable for buying stocks?"

"Now is the time to begin buying. Good industrial stocks are now selling below the actual value of the industries they represent. An investor may safely buy a stock when its market price equals ten times its annual earnings and these earnings have been steadily increasing, and when the current income is at least equal to that of a good bond."

"How can an investor know when it is best to sell?"

"If you own good stocks outright, it is never absolutely necessary to sell out. But you will do yourself no harm in selling at a large profit when the income yield is below that of good bonds and money is lending at two or three per cent above the net income on your stock. Before the recent crash the greatest speculative favorites were selling so high that the net income from their dividends was only two per cent. On this account we gave warning to our clients of the impending danger and I followed this advice in my personal affairs."

"Is margin dealing on a very conservative basis justifiable?"

"One may say that there is no such thing as an absolutely safe margin. Before the late crash brokers were requiring 50 per cent on high-priced stocks and that did not save traders from being forced to sell out. If a person will trade on margin, he should first consider seriously how much he can afford to lose and restrict his risk to that. Only a wealthy person should take large speculative risks. If he has $1,000,000 he can, I suppose, afford to lose $100,000 without being crippled, but such a loss may have a depressing psychological effect out of proportion to the loss. It would seem to me that a person should indulge even in this restricted form of speculation only if he can adjust his temperament to trading, and no rules can be laid down on that point."

"How about women?"

"Women who are dependent for their living on an income from securities should never speculate."

A study of statistics reveals the fact that American women now hold 41 per cent of the total wealth of the country, paying taxes on incomes which total more than $3,250,000,000 every year. This new and tremendous money power was felt in the recent inflated values of speculative stocks, and among those who suffered in the Wall Street crash of last month were many women. Among the women who lost heavily was Margaret Shotwell, who recently inherited $1,000,000. Every dollar of that was swept away and she still owes her brokers $50,000.

"It has been said that women are more likely to become gamblers than men in stock transactions?"

"I have seen no evidence of this. Most women buy outright for investment purposes. Those who speculate in the literal sense of the word, are usually women of large means, who can afford to lose if they must. Women who were caught in the crash didn't make scenes, so far as I know. It was only a supposition on the part of men that they would do so. They appeared to take their losses with as much fortitude as the men. There were no hysterics in the customers' rooms that I heard of; no ladies fainted over tickers or threw any fits. Until recently women were placed at some disadvantage in financial business, but now they are handling their investments as well as men."

"Do you think women can be as successful as men?"

"There are now over 200 women holding offices of high position in banks, and they inspire great confidence. The history of the human race points to women's partnership with man in all his undertakings. Next to love and making a home, money represents the strongest driving force in the world. It symbolizes protection and self preservation and that interests women as well as men. We are man's natural partner in all things, and women have an important contribution to make if they bring to business that spiritual force and that genius for constructive building which they have employed throughout the centuries in the knitting together of their homes and families.

"Formerly women who went into business had to give up some of their feminine characteristics—even had to change their dress. Today the picture has changed—women are active in business in all capacities, and more and more maintain their character as women and individuals and with success.

"My experience is that men consider the business world their particular province. Commerce and finance have been built by man, to whom the making of money, from the beginning, represented an economic necessity—and their conclusion seems to be that if women desire to enter the world in important capacities they must adapt themselves to man's methods of procedure, and it is a very natural instinct, because for centuries men have ruled the world—we are living in a man's world today as in the past."

"What should the holder of stocks do when a panic occurs?"

"If he owns his stocks outright he should hold on to them and not worry. Remember that if the stock is sound the declines in market value are transitory. You do not live on the principal of your investment, but on the income."

Mrs. Wyckoff's home surroundings show the excellent results of business and investment intelligently conducted. She lives at Great Neck, Long Island, on a beautiful ten-acre estate, which she christened Twin Lindens. She bought the land out of her first large investment profit. She first laid out her wonderful gardens, noted for their prize roses and irises, and afterwards built the pleasant white stucco house with red-tiled roof. With her on this estate live her two attractive little daughters, Gloria, aged thirteen, and Dorothy, aged eleven. The mother finds time from her business to train them to an understanding of their relationship to their fellow man.

Mrs. Wyckoff came to New York from Detroit, after a good musical education, intending to devote herself to a musical career. She obtained a business position on the Magazine of Wall Street as a temporary resource, and upon the death of her father finding herself the head of her family, devoted herself to the business.

Later she married the founder of the Magazine of Wall Street, and when he decided to devote himself to other interests in 1926 she bought out the business at his request and on his own terms, as found by the court.

Mr. Wyckoff, who is a very wealthy man on his own account, by the terms of the sale added $85,000 per year to his income.

The ability of Mrs. Wyckoff is recognized throughout the United States. The magazine which she owns, the Magazine of Wall Street, stands as a testimonial to her career, she having transformed it since 1912 from a small speculative periodical on the verge of bankruptcy into an extremely valuable organization, leading in its field.

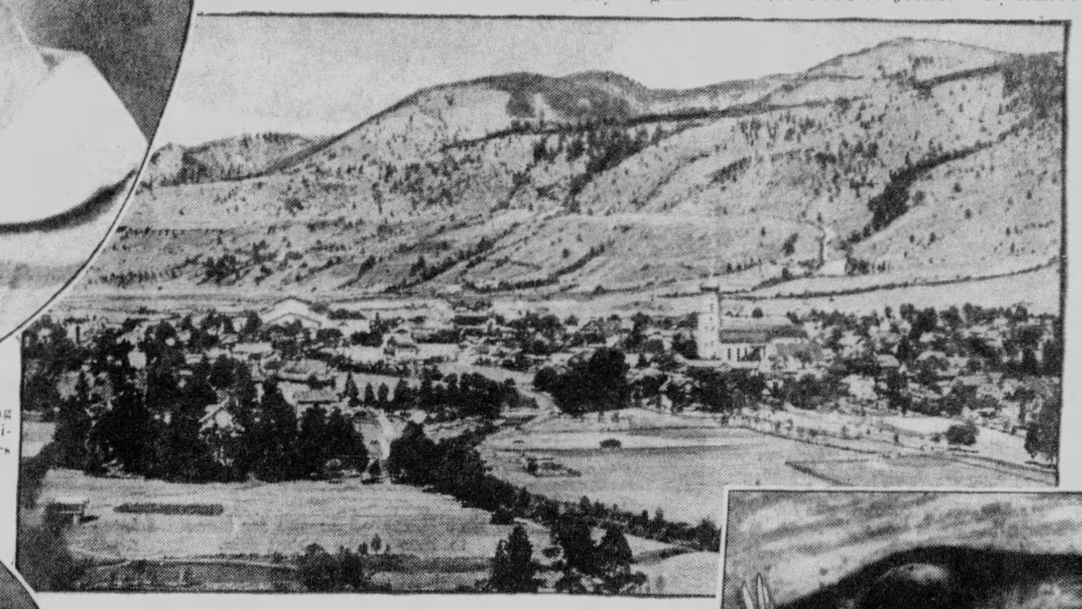
Mary Magdalene, Chosen for the Passion Play, Too Saintly

Fraulein Anni Rutz, Selected by the Oberammergau Committee to Play the Part of a "Fallen Woman" Is Criticized as Stiff, Severe and Lacking in Feminine Charm

Full-Length Photograph of Fraulein Anni Rutz, Whose Stiffness and Unattractiveness Is Pointed to as Making Her Unsatisfactory for the Role of Mary Magdalene.

Severe Method of Wearing Her Hair and Forbidding Features of Anni Rutz, Revealing None of the Feminine Attractiveness Which Artists and Bible Scholars Have Customarily Attributed to the Magdalene.

Mary Magdalene at the Feet of Jesus.—By Rubens.



The Little Village of Oberammergau, Where the Famous Passion Play Is Presented With Devout Religious Earnestness.

MUNICH, Bavaria, Nov. 20.

THE tiny but world-famous Bavarian village of Oberammergau is convulsed with strife between piety and realism as it prepares for the coming decennial performance of the "Passion Play."

The trouble, which these earnest souls cannot seem to solve, lies in casting the right type of woman for the part of Mary Magdalene, the woman of sin, who became such an outstanding saint. The problem never arose before because never before did it enter the innocent minds of those peasant and artisan actors.

This very important character, who washed the feet of the Saviour with her tears and wiped them with her hair, was also the first witness to the Resurrection. Mary Magdalene ranks among the highest of all the saints and, according to the custom, nearly 300 years old, of these village actors, such a leading part should be portrayed by a woman of such piety and good works as to be almost a saint herself.

Probably no more devoutly religious community exists than Oberammergau, which is small enough so all the natives know each other's habits and behavior to the smallest detail. Therefore, when the selection committee, whose judgment has never been questioned before, chose Anni Rutz, daughter of a widow who runs a candy shop, it made no mistake as to her morals, character and piety. The committee does not guess on such things. It knows.

And yet protests arose. Half the village is for Anni and half against her. A protest committee, composed of those who will play the parts of Judas Iscariot, Salome, John the Baptist, Nicodemus, St. Peter, Pontius Pilate, Herod's wife and Barabbas, is said to have called on the selection committee and stated that if Anni played Magdalene it would ruin their performances and the whole play. They were greatly agitated, but made no threats of resigning, as do amateur and professional actors in such cases. Oberammergau actors cannot resign, because it is a sacred duty laid upon them by their ancestors, a compact made with the Almighty three centuries ago, in consideration of which they escaped an epidemic that swept all the rest of Germany at the end of the Thirty Years' War.

From childhood Anni has gone about with modestly downcast eyes but thoughts on higher things than this world. Powder, lipstick and perfume are not for her, and when she is not helping her mother in the candy store her devotions leave no time for boy friends; therefore, no earthly love has entered this maiden's life, or probably ever will. Such a pious and rigorous existence has left its stamp on the youthful features and figure. She appears cold, severe, stiff and physically not very attractive to a common, ordinary man in the flesh.

Carlo Dolci's Conception of the Magdalene—A Woman of Attractiveness and Charm.

All this was excellent commendation for the part of a martyr or ascetic saint and as the Magdalene may have felt after her sins had been forgiven and she had reformed. But the main significance of this Mary is that she was a woman with a past and a pretty bad one.

She is first heard of when Mary's mother reports that her daughter is possessed of seven devils. The Saviour casts these out of her and, apparently in gratitude, Mary comes while He is eating at the house of Simon the Pharisee and washes His feet. But Mary Magdalene, besides those seven devils, is a woman of such loose morals and bad reputation that Simon revolts at the thought of the sinning woman coming into contact with his guest, and he even doubts that the Saviour can be a prophet or He would know how bad the woman was and drive her away. In the seventh chapter of the Gospel, according to St. Luke, it is related how this unspoken thought was rebuked:

40—And Jesus answering said unto him, Simon, I have somewhat to say unto thee. And he saith, Master, say on.

41—There was a certain creditor which had two debtors; the one owed five hundred pence, and the other fifty;

42—And when they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both. Tell me, therefore, which of them will love him most?

43—Simon answered and said, I suppose that he to whom he forgave most. And he said unto him, Thou hast rightly judged.

44—And he turned to the woman, and said unto Simon, Seest thou this woman? I entered into thine house, thou gavest me no water for my feet: but she hath washed my feet with tears, and wiped them with the hairs of her head.

45—Thou gavest me no kiss: but this woman since the time I came in hath not ceased to kiss my feet.

46—My head with oil thou didst not anoint: but this woman hath anointed my feet with ointment.

47—Wherefore I say unto thee, Her sins, which are many, are forgiven; for she loved much: but to whom little is forgiven, the same loveth little.

Reverently, but earnestly, it was pointed out to the selection committee that the meritorious Anni could not possibly look as if she had a past. It was not plausible that any man would have even flirted with her. Had the argument gone on in a producer's office of Broadway or Hollywood they would have said that the Magdalene must be somewhat of the "vamp" type, while this Anni could not possibly play because she is totally devoid of "IT."

The point was made that it was unrealistic for this cold woman to be put forward as a character whose sins had been many, to say nothing of those seven devils. The passion players of Oberammergau are intensely realistic, perhaps to a fault. They have been criticized for the loud off-stage pounding in which the spikes are supposed to be driven into the Saviour's hands and feet, and because a visible red fluid gushes forth at the thrust of the soldier's spear.

The players scorn such criticism. They are not staging a play to entertain and amuse, but trying to portray as realistically as possible a great tragedy. If the audience is upset thereby, that is as it should be. So nobody in Oberammergau disputed that Mary Magdalene should be realistic, but half of the village and a majority of the selection committee cannot endure the thought of a sensuous type of woman playing that important, sainted role.

The question had never arisen before in three centuries because, until after the Great War, the villagers were an un-ophisticated lot, living in a little secluded world of their own. After the war, however, Anton Lang, famous in the part of the Christus, and several others toured the United States to raise funds, and incidentally learned a few things. Then moving pictures penetrated the mountain walls around the village and taught it some more. As a result, the younger half of Oberammergau's citizens declare that Anni won't do at all, while the older ones answer that she will have to do.

Fraulein Anni Rutz herself says nothing, but prays that she may have a thorough understanding of the role. Such a miracle is not impossible. It happened in the case of Johann Zwink, the man who played Judas. When Zwink was a baby his mother fondly hoped that her little Johann might grow up to achieve the supreme honor of playing the part of the Saviour. He hoped so, too, for a few years, but by the time he was twelve years old even his mother despaired of it.

Though no boy among the whole 1,100 inhabitants of the village was more devout in his piety, he did not look it. Before he had reached manhood his countenance had taken such a villainous cast that the only important character he could possibly play would be Judas. When the committee finally gave him that role he was resigned, because it is no small honor.

But at rehearsals there was trouble. He had the face of a villain and traitor but his real piety and adoration shone through and besides that he had a personal veneration for Anton Lang, the woodcarver, postmaster, potter and stove expert, who played the part of the Saviour. Zwink turned out to be a natural born actor but he was unconvincing and worthless in that part because he did not feel it. The remedy was obvious. They told Zwink that he would have to talk to himself, make himself believe he was the traitor he had to portray. If he hadn't enough imagination for that, well, they had an understudy.

So, for the long months of rehearsals Zwink went about the village, scratching to his red beard, casting furtive glances at Lang and vowing to himself that he was going to betray that man for 30 pieces of silver. Johann gave an excellent performance of Judas but his self hypnotism was so successful that it terrified the pious man. He feared that the traitor characteristics were genuine and for a while threatened to commit suicide as did the original Judas.

Mary Magdalene at the Sepulchre.—Sir Edward Burne-Jones' Conception of Mary as a Woman of Appealing Attractiveness of Face and Figure.

The Passion Play originated nearly 300 years ago, during the dreadful thirty years' religious war which devastated Germany. One of its results was a plague, decimating the starving and half-deserted towns. But little Oberammergau, hidden up in the mountains, escaped the visitation for a long time. The authorities of the village, with a wisdom worthy of a more scientific age, established what was the equivalent of a modern quarantine, forbidding anyone to enter or leave its confines.

One day a native of Oberammergau who had moved away to the town of Eschenlohe, at the foot of the Ettalberg, became homesick, and found his way through the mountains at night. Before anyone could prevent it, he was in his old home and sick with the plague. After he and 40 more natives had died, the village fathers made an offering to the Almighty that if He would stop His plague from killing any more in that village, they, in return, would stage a dramatization of the Saviour's life, every ten years, as long as there was any Oberammergau.

The pestilence stopped at once and the little hamlet has kept its part of the bargain ever since and means to forever more. Nevertheless, in 1922, Pope Pius came very near putting an end to the long chain of performances. He sent a Papal Nuncio to investigate the whole situation, and particularly the charges of extortion and profiteering that had arisen. The report showed that the profiteering was not by the simple villagers, but by various organizations and individuals who assembled every decade to exploit that army of people who come from all parts of the world to view the spectacle. Means were taken to curb these grafters, and in 1930 the ancient and famous play will be staged again, and doubtless under more favorable conditions than ever before.

About 700 people, nearly half the village, participate in the performances, for which the leading characters get paid as high as $600 or $700. As they have to rehearse nearly a year, it can hardly be said that they are overpaid. The village profits something over $100,000 with which it builds and repairs roads and makes good the ravages of the horde of sight-seers who swamp it.

The costumes are made without regard for expense. That of Pontius Pilate costs $80 marks a yard, and is specially woven in Constantinople. There are two sets of costumes, one for rain, because the play goes on regardless of weather. There was a half hour pause once during a terrific hail storm, not to protect the actors from the hailstones, but because the thunder drowned their voices.

The play used to be given in the old churchyard, but outgrew the space and in modern times a stone stage became necessary. It is open to the sky and the elements, and there are no artificial lights, wigs, beards or makeup.

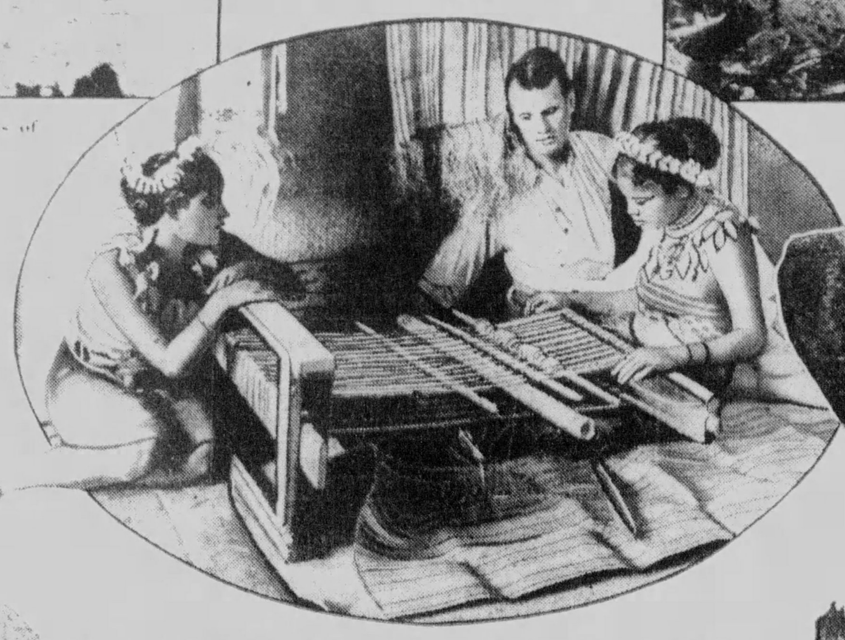
Mystery of the Ancient Monuments of the Lonely Pacific Isles

Scientists Studying the Towering Monoliths of the Marianas to Learn What Prehistoric Race Flourished in the Tropics Many Centuries Ago and Then Disappeared

The Ruins of the House of Taga, Island of Tinian, Showing the Huge Blocks of Solid Rock Which Formed What Must Have Been a Most Imposing Edifice Centuries Ago.

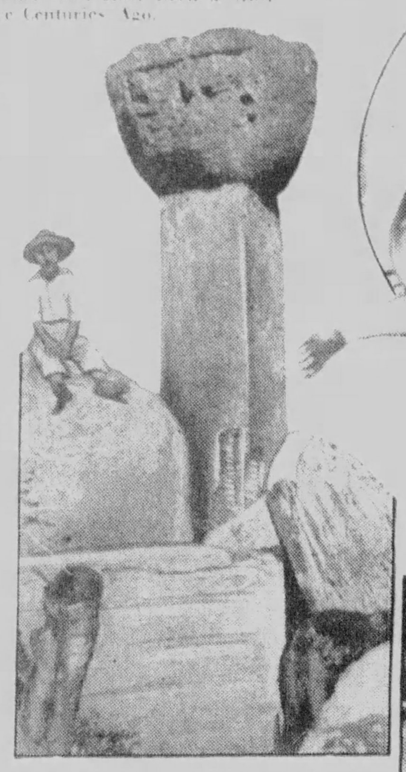
Another Ruined "Latte" Site Discovered in the Midst of a Mariana Jungle. All But One of the Capitals Have Fallen From the Columns and the Remaining One Seems Slipping.



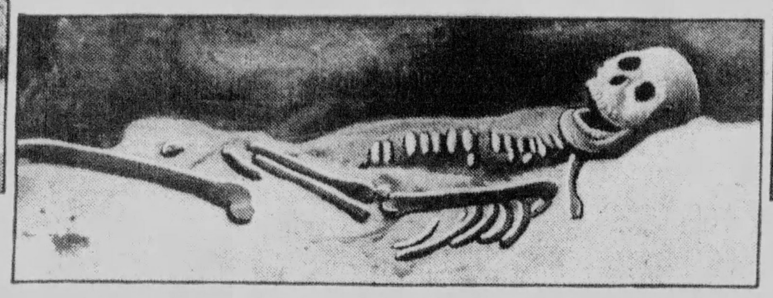
Director Hornbostel, of Bishop Museum Field Forces in the Marianas, Watching Modern Descendants of the Chamorras Weave Fabrics. These Girls Are Among the Few Survivors of a Once Mighty Race.

SCIENTISTS of the Bernice P. Bishop Museum of Honolulu have set out to solve the mystery of the huge prehistoric stone ruins of the Marianas, little islands tucked away in the western Pacific, 1,200 miles due east of the Philippines. On these seldom-visited islands are hundreds of monoliths, square columns from twelve to seventeen feet high. Topping each obelisk originally stood a round stone from five to six feet in diameter. Most of these capitals have fallen off in the course of the centuries, but many remain in their original position. The monoliths were laid out in colonnades. The largest colonnade is greater in extent than the mysterious English ruins at Stonehenge, some of the blocks of rock are larger than any used in building the Egyptian pyramids.

Among the many questions the scientists of the Bishop Museum have determined to solve are: Who erected these monuments and why? How many thousands of years old are they? Why were the pillars always carved from ancient sedimentary rock, the bowl-shaped capitals from newer coralline stone? Were the colonnades used for religious ceremonies or did they merely mark burial sites?



A Modern Chamorra Sitting Beside the Ruins That Were Used as Burial Ground by His Remote Ancestors. The Bowl-Shaped "Tasa" Has Stood on Its "Halege" for Unknown Centuries.



Skeleton of Prehistoric Man Excavated in the Marianas. Science Is Interested to Know More About Him.

Hans G. Hornbostel, in Charge of the Bishop Museum's Scientific Expedition to the Mariana Islands, Standing Beside One of the Smaller Monoliths on Which the Bowl-Shaped Capital Has Been Replaced. This Monument Is on the United States Island of Guam.

The Mariana Islands have been known to the white man a little more than four hundred years, having been discovered by Magellan on his famous trip around the world in 1521. They were held by the Spanish exclusively until 1898 when the hitherto unknown little Island of Guam was "captured" by the United States gunboat Charleston in one of the comic interludes of the Spanish American War. The other fourteen islands of the group are, by the Versailles Treaty following the World War, now under the mandate of Japan, having been sold by Spain to Germany after Spain's disastrous defeat by the United States in 1898.

When Germany was stripped of her Pacific possessions in 1919 at Paris, the Marianas, excepting Guam, happened to fall into the Pacific zone given to Japan to administer. They were originally called The Ladrones, meaning thieves, because of the reprehensible tendencies of the natives when the honest Spaniards first arrived. The name was later changed to Mariana in honor of Queen Maria Anna of Austria, widow of Philip IV of Spain. There are two groups of islands forming an archipelago just north of the Carolines. The ten northern islands are of volcanic origin; the five others are coralline limestone. It is on the coral islands of Guam, Tinian, Saipan and Rota that most of the mysterious ancient ruins are found.

When the Spaniards reached the Marianas more than four hundred years ago, the natives were known as Chamorras. There were about 50,000 of them. About a century later a great epidemic almost wiped out the Chamorras. The Spanish recruited new people from the Carolinas and the Philippines. The present population of about 2,500 are descendants of the Chamorras spared by the plague, of Philippine Tagal immigrants and a scattering of other Micronesian stocks.

The great monoliths are believed to have been the work of a prehistoric people who preceded the Chamorras. Just how old are the monuments the scientists do not even venture to approximate until further study is made. It is known that the rock forming the pillars dates back hundreds of millions of years to the remote era when the Polynesian archipelago was a continent, later buried beneath the ocean in one of the recurrent inundations of Paleozoic times. The sedimentary rock was laid down as ocean debris on what was then continental land.

In the Chamorro language, each group of monuments is called a "latte." An upright pillar is known as a "halege" and the hemispherical capital a "tasa." The most imposing structures are found on the Island of Rota, 35 miles north of Guam. Here is the old stone ruin larger than Stonehenge. In an uninhabited wilderness is an 800-foot colonnade of monoliths each four feet in diameter and from four to sixteen feet high.

Equally remarkable is the "House of Taga" on the adjacent island of Tinian. This includes two of the largest columns yet found of the prehistoric race. They are 11½ feet high, 18 feet in circumference at the base and 15 feet round at the top on which rest the bowl-shaped capitals five feet high and six feet thick. Each monolith weighs 30 tons and is carved from a single piece of hard sedimentary rock.

In the same tangle of underbrush are eight other columns. Three have fallen with their tasas still intact; three are completely shattered, and the capitals of the other two have been shaken from their pillars. The two parallel lines of columns originally were seven feet apart and formed a ground plan almost 54 feet long by 10½ wide.

On the United States island of Guam, the most southernmost of the group and the most populous, there are the ruins of 272 lattes. But only one halege and tasa remain in their original positions. Most of the great stones have been broken up for building material. Besides a cable station, Guam boasts two modern hospitals and a number of military and naval establishments.

As human remains have been found under the ruins of nearly all the colonnades, it is obvious that they were used as burial grounds. But whether these burials were incidental to other social, ceremonial or religious uses of the ancient monuments, the scientists have not determined. It does not seem reasonable to them that these huge monoliths and capitals were erected solely to mark the resting places of the dead. It is believed that the colonnades served some civic or religious function and that their uses as burial places was but a way of honoring those buried beneath them.

Some of the skeletal remains recently disinterred are undoubtedly of great antiquity, but just how old has not been figured out. The monuments were there when the Spaniards arrived in 1521, but the human remains were not discovered until exactly 100 years later. In November, 1921, Commander J. C. ("Snake") Thompson of the U. S. Navy was placed in command of the marine hospital on Guam. Thompson is of a scientific bent and earned his nickname by his long interest in strange reptiles. As soon as he saw the ancient ruins he started to dig around the bases of the monoliths. He was soon rewarded by unearthing first an old skull and then a large assortment of skeletal material, pottery fragments, stone and bone implements and other primitive artifacts reaching back to Stone Age days.

Commander Thompson was assisted in his collection of relics by Lieutenant Hans G. Hornbostel, who accompanied the first shipment of specimens to the Bishop Museum in Honolulu and became so interested in the work that he resigned his commission to return to the Marianas as field director of the museum's researches. With the cooperation of the Japanese naval authorities he has extended his investigations to all the islands of the group and has now collected more than 15,000 pieces of pottery, stone, bone and other ancient materials.

Study of the pottery is being made under the direction of Miss Laura Thompson, who received her training under Professor Roland B. Dixon, the great ethnologist of Radcliffe College, the women's school sometimes called the "Harvard annex."

Miss Thompson's preliminary studies have disclosed, she declares, that the vessels were not made by Polynesians, as the Polynesians did not make pottery at the time the islands were discovered by the whites. The pottery must have been made either by ancestors of the Chamorras or by early Chamorras whose descendents lost the art of baking clay.

Examination of the potherds (broken bits of pottery) has proved, Miss Thompson says, that the Mariana pottery culture must have taken considerable time. She adds: "The variety of vessels associated with the different sites, the local elaboration of the ruins, the heavy patina that coats most of the fragments, the evidence reflected in the forest growth and the volume of the surface deposits all indicate great age. It is known, however, that pottery, both in painted and unpainted forms, has been traced in its relationships from China to Southern Europe—thus it may be not too much to hope that some definite source may be attributed to that of the Marianas."

Evidence so far obtained by the scientists indicates that the vast monuments, the pottery, the stone and bone implements were made by a people who preceded the Chamorras—people who perhaps arrived from Asia in Stone Age times. Native legends of the Chamorras bear out this theory. The native workmen refused to touch the first human bones uncovered, as they said they belonged to the "tau-tau-mona," or "people who came before," and possessed evil spirits.

The native account of the destruction of the House of Taga on Tinian runs something like this: "Toumoulon Taga was the principal chief of this island. He reigned peaceably and no one thought of disputing his authority. On a sudden, one of his relations called T'joenanai raised the standard of revolt, and his first act of insubordination was to build a house similar to that of his chief. Two parties were formed; they fought; the house of the revolters was sacked; and from this quarrel, which became general, arose a war that depopulated the island and overturned its primitive buildings."

That the predecessors of the Chamorras either were a seagoing people or came a long distance across water is indicated by two facts observed by the scientists. First, they were always buried with their feet toward the sea; this custom was so universally observed that today the natives of the Marianas still bury their dead with the feet toward the ocean. Second, the main axis of the ancient colonnades parallel either the nearest ocean shore or, if inland, the closest body of water.

Generally, the prehistoric dead were buried on their backs, with the face turned to the left, the hands folded across the stomach and the feet toward the ocean. Buried near the dead, either at the feet or on one side, or strewn in the earth about them, are often found scattered bits of pottery, with occasionally a jawbone, a shell-scraper, the bones of a fish or the fruit bat, a crab claw, a drilled shark's tooth, or a stone adze or slingstone. The bones are sometimes found in less than thirty inches of soil.

The prehistoric people of Guam were cannibals, as evinced by dismembered human bones found in the remains of what were evidently funeral feasts, along with remnants of such other foods as fish, bats, mollusks and whalemeat. At the conclusion of the funeral feast the remaining food was strewn over the body and buried with it. Indications are found that human sacrifices were made and the bodies interred with dead chieftains.

The late sites of Guam—the most intensively explored and studied of the Mariana Islands—are divided into three distinct classes.

A separate burial ground was kept for warriors killed in battle or men who met any kind of violent death. Their skeletons are marked by missing limbs and broken skulls and by the spear heads buried with them. Another class of people whose identity has not been discovered seem to have been interred in an area extending fifteen or twenty feet from the latte toward the sea or running water. Burials never took place on the landward side of the latte.

The third and most recent type of cemetery extended seaward several hundred feet from the latte. Here are found most of the pottery, stone implements, weapons and flint fragments indicating the highest development of the prehistoric culture.

In these ancient burial grounds, males were always buried deeper than females. And sad to relate, children seem to have been most often victims of the cannibalistic feasts.

It will be several years, the scientists of the Honolulu Museum declare, before they will be able to determine positively who these ancient people were, where they came from and what became of them. Nowhere else in the world are found monuments such as these pre-Chamorras left in the lonely isles of the far western Pacific.

The "Perfect Savage" Sitting on the Grass in the Garden, Eating Her Lunch of Bones, Meat, Fruit and Vegetables, and Wearing No Clothes.

LONDON, Nov. 21.

MOTHERS of Northwood, a suburb of London, look over the walls of a garden and shudder, fascinated at the "little savage."

This person is Miss Diana Hughes, aged four, who runs around naked all day and sleeps naked, except on the coldest Winter nights. Diana has no regular meal times, but eats when she feels like it, gnaws bones like a dog, never tastes milk, bread and butter, sugar or salt, owns no "nightie," toothbrush nor pajamas, ought to die of pneumonia or indigestion, according to ordinary ideas, but never knows a cold or tummy-ache and has muscles like an athlete.

Some mothers, shocked at seeing a four-year-old tot scampering around nude in the cold outdoor air of a foggy London Winter afternoon, felt it their duty to notify the health authorities that a child was being exposed and neglected.

The authorities investigated and found a perfect little human animal, unclothed but, curiously enough, playing with a doll that was very much dressed up. She informed the learned visitors that they would be healthier if they wouldn't wear clothes. After examining Diana they were inclined to agree with her, said she was probably the healthiest child in London and had no orders or advice to give her mother. The little girl is as bright as she is healthy. She is sorry for her parents because they have to go around "all dressed in clothes," and while this gives her a slight feeling of superiority, she knows it isn't their fault.

Mrs. Hughes, who comes of an old society family and has made her debutante curtsey to King George and Queen Mary, is no food and health faddist. What she has done for her daughter was a matter of life or death. She was a very delicate woman and after her marriage the doctors warned that if she had a baby it would probably kill her and the child, too. However, she took a chance and almost proved the doctors right.

After several months, when she was able to get on to her feet and pay attention to the baby, she found they had almost been right about it, too. The little one, fed on cows' milk, suffered from continual cold and digestive troubles. Nobody saw much hope of it growing up. It got no exercise because it seemed too weak to even try to crawl. Nurses, medicines, doctors, patent foods were tried, but Diana moved steadily nearer the grave.

In desperation, ready to try anything, the mother went to a diet expert, known as a bio-chemist, whose orders terrified her. Mrs. Hughes says that she never would have had courage to obey him if she had not been sure that Diana was dying anyway. First, all the medicine was thrown out and the milkman was told he need not call any more. Then, with fear and misgivings, the mother stripped her child of its cozy little baby clothes. The little creature shivered once or twice, but then seemed to get used to the air, which was rather warm in the room that day.

The crowning outrage was when feeding time arrived, and instead of a bottle she handed the helpless infant a small, round, red apple. The baby felt of the strange, cold object, and then looked up at its mother as much as to say, "What is this irrelevant thing you have placed in my hand instead of the bottle you owe me?"

Mrs. Hughes felt as guilty as if she had handed her a stone. Anxiously the mother watched and saw the baby begin to take an interest in the small apple which was clutched in her tiny fist. She put it to her mouth and began to gnaw with her gums through which the delicate little teeth were just beginning to show. It took her a long time to pierce the skin, but eventually she won through and tasted the fruit inside. It took hours, but eventually the feat was accomplished. Baby Diana had eaten her first raw fruit! She was next tempted with a raw banana. Mothers will swear she must have choked. Mrs. Hughes was standing ready, afraid that she would. But slowly and carefully the banana disappeared.

Diana negotiated her first bone with the same success. Her noonday meal was cooked greens and meat juice, and after it she was given a chop bone with some meat left on. She took it in her chubby hand and began to gnaw. Did she get a piece of bone in her throat and put her mother into hysterics? She did not. When she bit off a small piece of bone she contemptuously spat it out.

The experiment went on and the first results were not only alarming, but just what friends and neighbors said common sense would tell anyone to expect of such crazy treatment. Diana suffered with more and worse colds and her digestive troubles, while different, were, if anything, worse. At least she had more colic. The thing that frightened her mother most was the rapid wasting away. Diana had at least had plenty of flesh but the bio-chemist had said that it was just fat, unhealthy flesh and too much of it. He was glad to see it go, but Mrs. Hughes wasn't, and when the little thing was reduced to hardly more than skin and bones she was ready to give up and go back to the cow.

But just then she noticed that there had been no colds for some time and, come to think of it, the digestive troubles had stopped. Also, thin as she was, Diana seemed to be full of energy, impossible to keep quiet. The father suggested that there must be considerable vitality behind all that activity and therefore she could not be so very close to the grave. Next they discovered that while still seemingly shrinking in size the baby was no longer losing weight and presently she gained a little. The explanation lay in the fact that small but firm muscles were developing where flabby fat had been.

And then the tide turned. The little figure rounded out with firm meat under a rosy skin that soon had a coffee-colored tan from all day exposure to the sun. This happened when Diana was nine months old and her health has never given her mother a day's worry since, though it has worried other mothers. The child usually eats about every four hours, but not unless she is hungry enough to ask for food and then is allowed to select her own menu.

A typical day's eating included four apples on waking; two oranges, a fat mutton chop with cabbage and spinach at 10 a. m.; two apples, an orange and three large crusts of bread at 1 o'clock; half pint of honey water and five tomatoes at 3:30; one ounce of cheese, two large apples and six ounces of raisins at 7:45. She drinks about a quarter pint of plain water before every meal.

When sweetening is wanted honey is used. Vegetables are eaten raw or slightly cooked in oil, never in water. She eats meat or fish on three or four days of the week, but her chief article of diet is fruit. Her teeth are white and in perfect condition, although she never uses a toothbrush. She has no desire for sweets or tooth-some delicacies beloved of ordinary children. She despises them. When her mother entertains, Diana will hand round sandwiches and sweetmeats and will never whisper the slightest appeal to have one. She has sometimes been found assuring a hungry guest of the dreadful results of an over-civilized diet.

Mrs. Hughes is not advising other mothers to dispense with the toothbrush. Ordinary children on ordinary diet probably need it, but it has been pointed out before that some fruits, especially apples, act as natural toothbrushes. Had there been any reason for it Nature could have as easily taught the intelligent ape to brush his teeth as the cat to wash her face.

When Diana is on the move, as she usually is, outdoors, it does not seem quite so miraculous that she does not catch her death of cold. Exercise might be keeping her warm, but at any moment she may yawn, curl up in a sunny corner of the garden and, like a sleepy kitten, take a nap. If a well-meaning stranger muffled in woolens happens to peep through the hedge just then, there is usually a lot of excitement. At night Diana sleeps with nothing on or over her but a single, thin, muslin sheet. Sometimes, when it is real cold, she murmurs in her sleep toward morning. Then her mother throws a shawl over her.

It is hard indeed to bring up a child out of the beaten paths, and soon it will be almost impossible. Even now, on the streets, Diana wears a thin, silken slip in deference to convention, and at home, for some company, puts on a pair of cotton pants. With school days, there will be a peck of trouble unless she surrenders to shoes, stockings and underwear, things she likes about as much as a dog enjoys a muzzle and collar. That women have risked their lives and immortal souls for dresses and fur coats would not seem plausible to this maiden.

Diana's keen little mind thinks problems through to a finish. It seemed strange that her parents did not practice what they preached about the merits of going unclad. They assured her grown-ups had to submit to the clothing custom or policemen would carry them off to prison.

The next time the family went for a walk Diana went into this matter with the first policeman she saw. Sure enough, the "Bobby" confirmed the parental theory of what he would do, and explained that it was the law. Immediately Miss Diana wanted to know about the law, but was informed that only learned judges and lawyers, who gave their lives to the subject, knew what it is about.

The "little savage" has no steady playmates, because no two children with such opposite methods of bringing up could see much of each other without keeping their mothers in a turmoil. Once in a while, however, Diana has a party at which, in deference to her guests, she appears in that little silk slip, though she hates it. Even then there is trouble unless the weather is warm. Outdoors it is not so bad, because the boys and girls, in their warm coats and caps, are comfortable. But in Diana's nursery there is never any heat, and so, as soon as the little visitors take off their coats, they begin to sneeze and catch cold.

Naturally little Diana likes cold baths. If by accident the water is warmer than tepid, she pulls out her foot with the indignant assertion that she is scalded. For really boisterous Winter days there is a woolen garment, but it is rarely worn. There is also a pair of sandals for use when there is snow on the ground, but no shoes.

She eats her natural food outdoors in the garden in a natural way, without knife and fork, in her fingers, often kneeling on a cushion before her little dining table. After eating a fat pork chop and polishing the bone, she curls up and sleeps peacefully as if there were no such thing as indigestion. Starchy food like bread or potatoes she must eat without butter, honey, dates or anything else to lubricate or tease her palate into taking more than she needs. There are no rewards for eating her spinach. She never is urged to eat anything.

Mrs. Hughes has adopted the same diet for herself, and thinks it has done her health much good, but thus far Diana's father has not. Of course, the policeman does not care what he eats, but, as Mr. Hughes explained to his daughter, he has to work for a living and lunches with other business men who won't let him get out of his old habits. Poor Daddy! he has to wear so much more clothes, too, than Mama does.

CHAPTER X.

Copyright by Cassell & Moore, London.

THERE are criminals, and there sometimes are backgrounds of criminal activities where the science of the modern police technical laboratory is of little avail—where the circumstances and details of the crime are perfectly plain, where the chief actor is well known, and yet where the hand of the law cannot reach him. Such are the bandits of Italy. Men like Nonce Romanetti and Mario Pianetti were truly "bandits," but never brigands.

For in the sunny lands around whose shores swirl the waters of the blue Mediterranean a bandit is a man who has washed away a stain on his pride and honor by killing the offender. He is a man who mistrusts the law and its subtleties, and who knows from long experience that, in his country at least, there is no truth in the words on the scroll above the judge's chair:

"La legge e uguale per tutti"—"The law is impartial, and the same for rich and poor."

Several of the bandits, such as the Corsican Romanetti and Pianetti, I knew well and visited in their impregnable retreats. Why? Because men—real men, who fear nothing and no one—must ever attract those who were brought up in the straitjacket of civilization and lacked the courage, or the opportunity, to cast off their fetters and live the man's life.

My profession has placed me among those who uphold the law, but that does not mean that my understanding and my sympathy with the "lone fighter" have been blunted. Quite different is it when one deals with men like "The Terror of Marseilles." The guillotine is too gentle for these, and the tortures they inflicted on their victims should be meted out to them also.

In April, 1926, the daily papers of all countries informed their readers that Nonce Romanetti, famous as the king of outlaws, who had evaded capture and defied the authorities of that wonderful island, Corsica, for more than fifteen years, had at last been ambushed and killed by the gendarmes. Immediately following this announcement there was an outcry in the local and the French papers. Romanetti had been assassinated by a traitor who had shot him from behind. The gendarmes had then staged a battle, emptied the weapons of the dead bandit, shot at him when he was already a corpse, and thus tried to make the inhabitants of the tragic isle believe that their idol had been killed in a fair fight.

The mystery of his death will never be completely cleared up now. The result of the post-mortem examination has been carefully kept secret. Yet facts have leaked out which make it possible to sense the truth.

Casual readers will certainly wonder what it matters who killed Romanetti, since the man was an outlaw with a price on his head. If they do, it is because they forget that Corsica is the last home of the vendetta, the blood feud, which punishes treachery in its own way and cares little for law or police.

"La Vendetta!"—a word that sounds like a howl of rage and the crack of a pistol, and whose last two syllables are made to accompany the sweep and thrust of the knife as it strikes home.

The ultimate vestiges of primitive proud manhood will finally dissolve and fall into dust when the vendetta dies. Did not man ever prefer the Hebraic code—an eye for an eye—to the toga and wigs of lawyers? Thus the Scottish clans carried on the tradition of their Phoenician and Scandinavian forebears in Great Britain, and the duel the world over is merely a decadent, degenerate wraith of it. While man was a fighting animal there was only one way in which an injury or an insult could be effaced—by the survival of the better man, able and strong to avenge. It is from those simple, primitive days that we have inherited the ceremony of shaking hands—when each of the combatants dropped his weapon and grasped the other's fighting hand in sign of peace.

It is natural that Corsica should be the last stronghold of the man's way.

Tremendous and inevitable is the influence of the land itself. Corsica has always been called the "tragic isle." Its mountains and valleys, hewn out of the primeval rock by Titans; the tortured, broken crags, attesting to the violent battles of Nature's forces; the hard, unyielding soil and the black forests of cedars and pines are a true picture of the soul of its inhabitants—violent, proud, sad and gloomy. As the climate varies from one valley to another, so the nature of the children born and reared there has its specific characteristics, dividing them naturally into clans and groups—jealous of their traditions and legends. Who shall say that men born on such soil and bearing such names as Spada—the sword—or Saetta—the lightning, or Romanetti—the little Roman—are not predestined to deeds of violence? Sooner or later they react to these influences and, as a result, become bandits. As boys they may not learn to write, but they learn how to shoot and hunt the wild boar; they learn to be at home in the swirling surf and to fight nature in all its moods.

Yet Romanetti was a peaceful, law-abiding citizen until treachery and injustice forced him to kill, and thus take to the macchia—the brush—where, like many others, he lived at war with the authorities, who hunted him day and night, giving him no respite; but, unlike many others, his extraordinary endurance, his undaunted courage, his deadly skill with firearms, provided him with the means to resist successfully all the efforts of the brigades of gendarmes. That is why he became the king among outlaws, feared by the men in uniform but loved by his own kind.

Romanetti was by trade a cattle-breeder, who, on market and fair days, killed and sold his animals, cutting them up in the open square of his native village, Calcatoggio. On one of these occasions he found that, in order to satisfy his clients, he needed another animal. He sent to one of his fellow dealers for a bullock, and was told to choose from the herd in an adjoining field. He did so, killed and cut up the beast and sold it, paying for it the same evening in a tavern in the usual way.

A cash transaction, where neither asked for nor gave a receipt.

A few days later his wife awoke him at dawn with the unpleasant news that the police were outside and demanded that he should follow them to town on a charge of cattle-stealing. Complaint had been made by the man from whom he bought the bullock, and who denied having given him permission to take it, and who, furthermore, denied having been paid.

"The gendarmes!"—ominous words—dreaded by all the country people as being synonymous with injustice.

Romanetti slipped out by a back window and disappeared in the bush. From there he opened negotiations with the man who accused him. He sent one of his friends to make an offer of a second payment and a hundred francs over (then a hundred francs was equivalent to twenty dollars) if he would withdraw the accusation. The offer was accepted and an appointment made for the next day, when the money should be paid and a friendly drink was to wipe out all ill feeling.

Instead of going openly, Romanetti, who was by nature suspicious, sent his friend into the village with the money. He himself waited—hidden behind a rock—to see if all was well. To his rage he saw that a trap had been set for him. A dozen gendarmes were hidden to take him. Thereupon a second message reached the treacherous dealer.

"Tell the black traitor," Romanetti said to his friend, "that he will not hear the shot that kills him." He kept his word. The next morning, as the man passed through the village, a pistol spat from behind a tree and he fell dead, a bullet in his heart.

Now Romanetti was a bandito with a price on his head.

He fled into the mountains on the same day, after embracing his wife and instructing her in the management of the farm.

Romanetti was not poor, and soon he gathered about him a number of men—outlaws some of them, others merely woodsmen and hunters who formed his bodyguard. He then organized a system whereby he could still negotiate for the sale of his herds or the grapes produced by his extensive vineyards. Dogs were the scouts and sentries he depended upon principally. His two favorites, Zinetta and Black, never left his side. These dogs were wonderfully trained—they never barked; a growl only was needed to warn their master that enemies were approaching. In a circle of several miles sentries and dogs were posted day and night, so that, long before the police could come within range even, Romanetti was far away.

Every bandito in Corsica has what are called "guides." Their duty is to explore the district through which their chief intends to pass. They enter a dwelling first and signal the presence of an enemy. They also must leave the house first in order to draw the possible volley, thus giving the bandito an opportunity to escape during the confusion. Of these guides Romanetti had several who were at all times ready to die for him, for he was generous and lovable, although now a killer of men.

One of them was slain shortly after Romanetti took refuge in the mountains. An irresistible desire to see his wife had seized him. A messenger was sent warning her that he would come that night. This the police had counted upon, and an ambush, cunningly prepared beforehand, was in readiness. Scouts duly explored the neighborhood, and, for once quite unaware of any danger, signalled to Romanetti that all was quiet. Shortly after midnight he arrived at his house. A copious dinner had been prepared for him and, after the first joyous effusions and embracings, he sat down facing the door to enjoy his meal. By his side was his gun, and in his pockets and belt half a dozen pistols and knives—Romanetti specially favored large automatics such as Mausers and Parabellums, and of these he possessed several. He had barely touched his food when the dogs growled. At the same moment one of the guides burst into the room.

"The gendarmes—a troupe of them are rushing the house!" he gasped.

Romanetti calmly rose, kissed his wife and made ready.

"Go out the front way and cover my retreat," he ordered.

Without hesitation the man stepped full into the light of the open door while Romanetti slipped into a back room. A fusillade burst out as the guide was seen. He staggered and fell, but from the ground continued to fire in a sweeping half-circle at the advancing police, killing and wounding several of them. Meanwhile the other men posted in the brush and hidden behind rocks and trees were attacking the gendarmes from all sides. Romanetti succeeded in dropping to the ground from a window at the back, but in doing so sprained his ankle.

For several minutes he crawled through the undergrowth—believing that the attention of the attackers was completely focused on the front of the house, where uninterrupted firing told him that the stubborn battle between his men and the police was continuing. Abruptly a dog growled near by and a sharp voice called out:

"Halt—whoever you are—or we shoot!"

Without replying Romanetti fired toward the

On this page today and in subsequent chapters Ashton-Wolfe emerges from the rigid secrecy of the detective bureaus of Monte Carlo, France and Scotland Yard, and reveals the fascinating work behind the scenes in the Underworld of the great European capitals, and explains how this modern real-life Sherlock Holmes dealt with many of the most perplexing criminal mysteries of modern times.

Foremost nation of the world in almost every field of human endeavor, America lags behind in the efficiency of its detective police. In no city in the United States is there a complete scientific laboratory for the exhaustive study of every possible kind of incriminating evidence; no detectives who know what to do with intricate clues when they see them.

If the cases given on these pages by Mr. Ashton-Wolfe had come before the police of any American city, it is probable that every one of them would have been pigeon-holed among the long and increasing list of unsolved crimes.

Hotel du Monte d'Oro, Vizzanova, Corsica. Down the Mountainside and Through the Thick Bush Behind This Inn Romanetti and His Followers Often Came for a Dinner, Drinks and a Dance, While Pickets Watched the Road on Either Side.

"The night, black and treacherous, enveloped me like a mantle. At last my two guides—one in front and one behind—hissed cautiously. It was the signal to halt, a welcome signal, for my lungs were laboring from the steady climb, stumble and recovery of the last two hours. Around me I could see nothing but vague outlines of rocks and stunted trees; and every darker shape was pregnant with unknown dangers.

"Abruptly a twig cracked a few yards away, and with a click an electric torch dazzled us with its blinding rays. But only for an instant; then darkness—painful now by contrast—crushed us under its pressure. A deep voice questioned the first guide. The words were harsh and suspicious. Then the one word 'Vengan' (Come) reassured me. Two huge dogs standing stiffly ready, flattened their ears and acquiesced in the approach of strangers of unfamiliar odor. We had reached the first of the sentries guarding the liberty and life of Nonce Romanetti, outlaw and killer of men."

voice; then, ignoring the pain of his injured foot, he stumbled from rock to rock toward the bay below—where he knew that a boat belonging to a friendly fisher was lying. Shots were being fired at the spot from where he had come, and these covered the noise he made, so that he reached the boat safely. Together with the fisherman and one of his friends he pushed the boat out into the quiet water. Unfortunately—when only a short distance from the shore—they saw another detachment of gendarmes running toward them along the beach. These had been about to attack his house from the rear, when the noise of the keel grating over the stones had attracted their attention. Peremptory orders came from the officer in command of the police.

One of Romanetti's Pickets on Guard.

"Take aim—ready to fire in volleys! Now, you in the boat—back water at once and return to shore!" There was nothing else to be done. The fisherman and his companion replied that they were returning in obedience to the order, shouting as loudly as they could, so as to cover the sound of Romanetti's plunge into the sea.

When the disappointed gendarmes searched the little skiff they found no trace of the man they sought. That night the guide who had gone out first and two of his companions were killed, while four police were dead and six wounded. Romanetti and the others escaped and gained their retreat in the mountains.

Who had warned the police of his presence in the house that night was the question that tortured them all. A traitor in their midst; that was impossible! Yet the dogs had not given warning until too late. Someone had kept them quiet—someone whom they knew!

Suspicion fastened on a young man from Cinnarca, named Castiglione, for he had been in charge of the first dogs. Castiglione had formerly courted the girl whom Romanetti married. Doubtless this was the motive for his treachery. A search of the camp soon disclosed the fact that Castiglione had disappeared, and with him one of the horses.

"Bring him in," was all that Romanetti said when told the news, "but alive—mind you—alive!"

Two days later a party of five horsemen arrived at the camp of the bandito. In their midst was Castiglione—bound and helpless. For some minutes Romanetti glared at him in silence, then he said to his men:

"Untie him, give him a gun and leave him alone with me. If I am killed he is to go free. Now go!"

They did as their leader commanded. The ropes were cut, the traitor set on his feet, and a pistol, fully loaded, was put into his hand; the men then mounted and rode off to some distance. Romanetti remained sitting in the same position where he had been when the prisoner was brought before him. He appeared to be talking to the traitor.

Suddenly Castiglione dropped to the ground; several shots spurted from his pistol and Romanetti rolled over. Instantly the other was up—had seized the horse on which he had come—and attempted to mount. Before he could do so a single shot cracked from the boulder behind which the bandit had rolled, and the younger man dropped—shot clean through the heart. When his men rode up, Romanetti rose and, pointing to the body, said:

"Take him to his family and tell them that he was both traitor and coward—he fired at me while my hands were empty and I was merely talking to him."

No doubt this proof of superiority had its effect, for no further attempt was made by any of his followers to betray their leader.

His second brush with the authorities came some months later. A captain in the French army, visiting Ajaccio, made a bet that the reason why no one could take the redoubtable bandit was because squads of men were always sent against him, and they were never able to approach near enough. He would take Romanetti single-handed. The valiant officer sent a request to the bandit for an interview, which was granted. Instead of going himself he sent one of his friends. Dressed as a peasant, he followed him and waited outside the house where Romanetti was supposed to be staying. For several hours the Captain remained hidden. Shortly before dawn he saw his friend leave the house, accompanied by several guides. As soon as they had ridden away, the officer stealthily approached the entrance. Suddenly throwing it open, he levelled his weapons and ordered the men still inside to surrender. No one moved. Abruptly from behind him he heard a laugh, and a voice said:

"If you seek Romanetti, here he is; but I advise you to go away peaceably. Life is sweet for you, too, I suppose. If you are wise—go!"

Wheeling, he saw the man he had come to take standing in the middle of the path, with his hands in his pockets. Without hesitating he fired several shots, none of which took effect, for, although Romanetti had not moved, the morning mists made the short, squat figure dim and indistinct.

Again came the voice: "Now go back and say that I am not eager to kill men, even when they attack me, who have never harmed them personally; but shoot no more."

This generosity only maddened the Captain, who felt intensely humiliated. Again he fired. At once an answering flash came from the path and he fell. Romanetti turned him over sadly. "Why will they not let me be?" he said to his men, now crowding round. "I never seek them. If they'll let me live my comfortless life in the bush, I'll never harm them. I have had them at the end of my gun so often when they never even saw me, yet I did not fire."

So, little by little, grew the legend around this heroic figure. I say "heroic," for, whatever the right and wrong of the matter, Romanetti was a man; kindly and generous to a fault; fearless and fair in all his dealings with friend and foe. The ethics of Corsica are not the ethics of other lands, that is all. His exploits were told in tavern and drawing room, and many were those who, prompted by curiosity and the spice of adventure, tried to approach him.

Once he was carousing, as he often did, in some little wayside tavern, while his dogs and men kept watch.

A little distance away, in a poor peasant's hut, a woman lay dying, and the noise of song and laughter came in gusts to disturb her last hours. In the midst of a wild dance the village priest came in and bent over Romanetti, murmuring something. Without a word the bandit rose and followed the priest. In the room of death he uncovered himself and tiptoed to the bedside. For some minutes he spoke to the dying peasant and to the husband kneeling beside the bed, trying to comfort them. Then he left quietly. At the door he thrust a fistful of banknotes into the hands of the priest. "For the funeral and the children," he said, "and some masses for her soul."

Returning to the inn he roughly silenced his followers, and, bidding them mount, rode off into the bush.

One day at a village dance a quarrel arose over a girl, as it often does, for flaming jealousy is the Corsican's greatest fault. A sailor was shot in the thigh. A man called Ferrari was accused by the girl of being the man who fired and wounded her sweetheart. Ferrari was arrested, but protested his innocence. A few days later Romanetti called at the Mayor's residence in broad daylight and left a letter in which he stated that not Ferrari but another man named Spada had fired. That man was with him and would give himself up if Ferrari were released. Upon this, several men came forward and admitted that Spada was truly the guilty one, but that they had not dared to say so until Romanetti brought the letter, for Spada was the bandit's friend. Still the authorities refused to release Ferrari. He was being conducted by two gendarmes to Ajaccio, when suddenly a wild figure burst out of the macchia.

"Hola! I am Spada. I shot the sailor. Let Ferrari go and I will come with you."

The gendarmes stopped, hesitated and then shook their heads.

"No. We have orders to take Ferrari to prison, and we must do it."

"Will you let him go?" Spada yelled furiously. "He is innocent, I tell you."

The gendarmes shrugged their shoulders and started off with their prisoner.

"Well then—par tous les diables"—Spada roared—"I'll make you!"

Two reports burst from his drawn pistols. One of the gendarmes named Caillaud lurched forward and rolled down the precipice, striking the ground a hundred feet below; the other, Dominique Antoine, staggered and fell with a wound in his head.

Now Spada, who had till then been an honest forester, was an outlaw. That night he slept in the house of a friend before rejoining Romanetti. Ferrari, although innocent, feared the result of the inquiry, and when released through the intervention of Spada he disappeared into the bush, where he fell in with some of Romanetti's men, to whom he related what had happened.

Romanetti at once set out to fetch Spada. It was dawn when he arrived near the house, and saw to his horror that it was already surrounded by the police. How could he warn Spada, yet sleeping peacefully? Cautiously he circled around the dwelling and took up his position on the opposite side of the river La Cravone. With supreme indifference to the danger for himself he emptied a pistol at the oncoming police, firing over their heads. A howl of rage answered him.

"Romanetti—c'est Romanetti!"

At the same time the troop split up, some of them at once attacking him. But now Spada was awake, he had a chance to escape. Inside the hut a terrible scene was taking place. With a bound Spada was on his feet. His friend was standing looking out of a window and waving a handkerchief.

"Cane—you have betrayed me! Now go first—out of the door—now, at once, or I'll shoot you dead! If you get away, we'll cry quits."

Pale and trembling, with instant death threatening him—the man stepped to the door and opened it. A volley greeted his appearance.

CHAPTER XVI.

A Delightful Prison.

I

N all the experiences of all the stowaways, never did one travel under such delightful conditions! Nor was a prison ever made so charming! I can only hope that Mr. Flow may often find his chains as light as those that held me on board The Goddess, named after the trademark of the Dubot-Saxe spark plugs. Georgette and Trompette! When one left me, the other was at my side. My imagination worked day and night, inventing stories, of which they never tired. They demanded tales that would make them shiver with fear; the more terrible the better. What adorable children they were! They trembled in my arms and begged, "Tell me some more. . . ."

Trompette confided to me with all the seriousness in the world that she had never loved anybody but me, and that when I left her, she was going to enter a convent. She was jealous of the attention Georgette paid me.

"She doesn't love you the way I do," explained Trompette. "She is rich and has had plenty of men in love with her. I have seen her flirt with them lots of times. But with me, you are the only man I could ever love."

But I shall not stop to tell you in detail how they spoiled me. Ah, Georgette! Ah, Trompette! I was only an unscrupulous impostor, but the charming days of our idyll at sea could not have been more perfect, had I been the true hero you thought me. I shall never forget your gay, tender smiles, Georgette; not the serious gaze of your trusting eyes, my little Trompette! Neither the past nor the future existed while I lived safely in your care!

The weather stayed fine all through our trip to the South. We passed Saint-Sebastian without stopping, and I suspected Georgette of having something to do with that. But I could not complain at the lengthening of my enchanted voyage. The sea continued to rock us gently, and through the port hole I caught glimpses of the coast of Spain. About this time I learned that, on a whim of Sam's, we were turning north again and were going to run along the coast of France, stopping at Biarritz. Trompette gave me this information, making me promise not to mention it to Madame, who had told her in confidence.

My charming Georgette was obviously afraid that I might escape her, while we were close to the shore. And her very precautions put the idea into my head. I had no desire to land at Le Havre, after my unceremonious leave-taking. A ridiculous incident—but one with serious consequences for my safety—soon brought my resolve to a climax.

My only source of complaint so far had been a cramp in my legs. And the time came when I could no longer stand my close quarters. It was the evening Trompette had told me of the change in plans. I had reached the point where I was willing to run any risk for a walk on deck. Georgette had not yet come down, the captain was giving her a lesson in astronomy. The others were hard at their game of poker. The night was hot and moonless, and I sent Trompette up to see if the coast was clear.

"Find out if it's safe for me to go up," I urged.

After five minutes of objections, she consented to do what I had asked. I had left the door between the stateroom and the saloon ajar, and a few moments later I saw a shadow at the head of the stairs. Thinking it was Trompette, I advanced to meet her. But the lights were suddenly switched on, and I found myself facing a woman I had never seen but whose voice I had often heard. It was Adelaïd.

She gave a cry of fright, and I retreated instinctively into Georgette's room. Immediately afterwards, I heard Georgette's voice, and the two women followed me into the cabin.

"For heaven's sake, be quiet," begged Georgette.

And to save the situation, she could think of nothing better than to tell Adelaïd who I was. Adelaïd was a tall, dry woman, as knotty as the branch of an apple tree, with a face like a knife. Her short hair brushed in a bang over her brow, reached nearly to her restless, glassy eyes. She was at least forty-five, and a slight mustache darkened her lip.

"I told you never to leave Trompette's room," said Georgette to me in a severe, impersonal tone. "Get back there at once and don't let me see you again."

The next day, while I was sitting quietly in my retreat, the door to the bathroom opened, and I saw Adelaïd enter. She came ostensibly to interview me, but after a few questions—for the sake of form—threw herself into my arms. Or rather, she took me into hers. I freed myself energetically.

She clung to me, whispering phrases from popular novels in my ear. But I was pitiless. No doubt it was tactless on my part, but it was certainly sincere. Adelaïd's caresses were no temptation, and Potiphar's wife was not repulsed more brutally. I fled to Georgette's room, but she followed me. I returned to Trompette's. . . . At length Adelaïd abandoned her thoughts of conquest, and I heard her climbing the stairs with muttered threats.

At once I realized what I had done, and was ashamed of my clumsiness. "Hell hath no fury like a woman scorned—" The lady with the mustache would not waste time in getting her revenge.

At that moment the yacht was turning about, and we slowed down. From what Trompette had said, I gathered that we were off Saint-Jean-de-Luz. In another few minutes, I would no doubt be dragged from my hiding place and hailed before the captain or the inhospitable Sam. There was no time to hesitate. I knew where Trompette kept her savings, and took possession of them with a secret vow to repay her with a little gift besides later on. Then I slipped up to the deck, glanced towards the lights of the coast, and dropped into the water.

Half an hour later my feet touched sand and I walked up on the shore. I had taken my time and was not too tired. In fact, the exercise and the shock of the cold water had taken the stiffness out of me, and I strolled along the beach enjoying my new freedom. Fifty yards down the shore, coming on a row of bathhouses, I decided to dry off in one of them and wait a few hours before risking an appearance in the town.

When I emerged from the bathhouse, refreshed by a long sleep, my plan was ready. It was after midnight. I ventured as far as the harbor, where nearly all the cafes were closed. In front of one, however, stood two long, heavy limousines. I approached the door of the cafe cautiously and peered in. Two chauffeurs, in shirt sleeves, were playing billiards in the rear room. My choice settled on the front car, which was filled with packages, for the chauffeur had left his uniform, cap and coat on the seat. I waited until an animated discussion arose as to whether one ball had touched another, and slipped into the driver's seat. The car started as silently as a bird. Everything perfect! My thanks to the millionaire who had thoughtfully provided it. . . . In a moment I was sailing down the road, tapping on the gas.

Without stopping, I put on the chauffeur's cap and slipped my arms, one by one, into the sleeves of his coat. Then back in high. . . .

A few minutes later the pounding of an open cut-out sounded behind me. My two men in the other car! I should have had sense enough to monkey a bit with the other engine before leaving. Another time I would know better. I strained the car to its utmost, but my pursuers hung on doggedly, the distance between us neither lessened nor grew. The only chance of getting rid of them was to turn into Biarritz, with which I was unfamiliar; but with a few turns in the narrow streets I might throw them off. I did so, taking the turns on two wheels.

How I got outside of the town again I have no idea. But I emerged suddenly on a clear highway and caught a glimpse of the one word, "Paris," on a sign. I was headed north. What wouldn't I have given to have been back in my little room in the rue des Bernardins! On board the yacht I had let my beard grow out again, in spite of protests from Georgette and Trompette.

All night the car devoured the roads. My headlights were good and I used them, for there was no [illegible] behind me now. Or, at least, I thought there was nobody. At dawn I stopped for gas in a little town whose name I never learned. I noticed then that my human-me was a handsome, dark red, an indiscreet color. The chauffeurs had probably reported the theft, and if Madame Potiphar had been busy, Mr. Flow's new exploit was no doubt already known in all the large towns.

I decided to abandon the road to Paris, and head northwest towards Brittany, avoiding the main highways. I had consulted the chauffeur's map, and knew that I was not far from Angouleme, another city to steer clear of. Suddenly, glancing in the mirror, I noticed a cloud of dust behind me and a car manned by three men, one of whom was in shirtsleeves and standing on the runningboard, waved one arm frantically. My chauffeurs. . . .

The trick I had used at Biarritz had been too successful not to try it again in Angouleme. But that cursed red of the car! It could not escape notice much longer. In the center of the village I stopped in front of a garage. Only desperate remedies could help now! In the garage I called for the owner, and asked:

"Have you got a man you can trust?"

"What do you want him for?"

"I'll tell you. I promised a friend of mine to bring his car to him at Rennes today. But I have just got a telegram about some business that keeps me here in Angouleme. Now have you got a man who could take this car on to Rennes? I'll pay him well, and he'll get a good tip at the other end. But he'll have to travel fast, because they are waiting for those packages."

"I've got a man all right, and I would trust him like myself, but I need him here."

"I'll give you five hundred francs. . . ."

"You can have him!"

He nodded to a mechanic who had been listening.

"You heard what it is he wants?"

"I get you. I'm to step on her."

I handed the mechanic two hundred francs, and scribbled an imaginary address on a slip of paper.

"Now make the dust fly!"

It was with deep satisfaction that I saw the incriminating car disappear around the corner of the square. The others could not be far behind. They were probably circling about Angouleme now, wondering what had become of me. Turning to the garage man, I remarked casually:

"I have to go back to the telegraph office."

Five minutes later I had the pleasure of seeing my chauffeurs, who had stopped in the midst of a crowd, and were asking if any-[illegible] car. [illegible] car go by. I permitted myself

"A red car. It stopped here on the square. A car full of packages. . . ."

"That's the one!"

"The man had on a cloth cap and long coat. . . ."

"My things, the fools! Which way was he going?"

"He asked the way to Rennes."

"Thanks. Turn around, Francois. We'll get the. . . . How long ago was it?"

"About ten minutes."

The last I saw of them they were crossing the square at full speed, ignoring the gesticulations of an angry policeman.

I walked quietly to the station and took the first local out of town. During the next thirty-six hours what locals I took! And what a maze of connections I picked my way through! But eventually I landed in a solitary little village beyond Caen. . . . Of all poor Trompette's savings there was only one fifty-franc note left. Hardly enough to splurge on, especially as I looked like a vagabond since I had discarded the chauffeur's uniform. Nor could I picture myself at Deauville, though I was not far from it and might send word to Helena.

I did not risk the coast. But, a couple of miles from Luc-sur-Mer, I rented a room under the roof at the Inn of the Deliverance. For two days I did not put Christmas came long before watches, but ever since the two have been on earth together . . . they've been together inseparably, it seems.

For somehow a watch is the perfect way of saying all the things that bubble up inside of you when the mellow Christmas season comes along. There are many watches . . . and many are good. But you are sure when you give, or receive, an ELGIN. More than sixty-five years of fine watchmaking has placed them in a high position all their own. Their accuracy and reliability have made them the largest selling watches in the world.

And this is the best Christmas in the aforementioned 65 years for choosing an ELGIN. More styles. More new shapes and sizes. Prices in a closely ascending scale from $15 to $650. my nose over it, but, as usual, I caught myself in time. I had brought with me a bag of underclothing and a set of evening clothes, which I had packed in the valise which I had left at Le Havre.

But still I was not ready to go to Helena. I delayed and kept Adelaid's dressing-case. I found myself once more so close to Helena; however, I felt my fortune would be to see her again. I had become accustomed to the idea of her. Besides, the boats of my little domain with touching grace. The cabin was divided into two rooms. In the first, which served as kitchen, dining room and bedroom, I had some difficulty in putting space for my legs. The second was the cabin, that is to say there was an uncurtained, wooden table built. At one end of the table, were piled law records and papers, at the other, at typewriter. Nathalie continued to do typing during the vacation. Watching and Simon both, to the utmost, to support her efforts, and never not to disappoint it to their studies. Clotilde would repay herself at last, when she had become successful at the bar. Charming devotion! And all so simple! The weather had given them both a good color. Each of them was charming, but Clotilde had the masterly look in her eyes that add—power to beauty. While eating our clams and shrimps, which they had gone themselves to get that morning, Clotilde talked to me with the greatest seriousness, and gave me good advice.

"You are starting out wrong," she said. "Nowadays one has to specialize. I have made my choice. Beginning this Fall, I am going to spend four hours a day in a bank, learning the ins and outs of disputed claims. In that way I expect to pick up a few interesting cases, especially if I can get a job at the same time in a business lawyer's office. But my real plan—if I can carry it out—would be to marry a lawyer who would plead the cases I brought him. Then I would devote all my time to disputed claims in some important bank."

She told me this very simply, without blushing, and looking me straight in the eyes. She was already a business woman outlining a partnership. It was I who blushed. But she gave no sign of noticing, and asked how I had spent my vacation.

I said that when the courts had grown deserted, I had run away, and not having much money had tramped through the countryside, like a vagabond. I invented an itinerary, and the vagabond was accepted without question. I told them where I was staying at present, and that I was getting ready to start back to Paris, for my pocket was empty.

"You don't need to hurry," said Coltilde. "We can supply you with meals. You can go fishing with us and we'll share the fruits of our labors."

Having no other plan in mind, I accepted and returned the next day. They proved to be jolly and entertaining companions. What good times we had, fishing, swimming, and coming back to their cabin tired and hungry!

I hardly thought of Helena now, having had no reply to my letter. But one day, as we were having bread and cheese with a bottle of cider on the sand dunes, our attention was attracted by voices from a group of people strolling along the beach. The women in light, filmy costumes; the men in flannels and blue coats. Behind them, a fashionable automobile came slowly along the road. I recognized Helena at once. She was wearing a white dress and an ultramarine hat; and she was beautiful enough to go on one's knees to.

The first impulse was stronger than my will; I rose confusedly. Then, my legs shaking under me, I dropped back on the sand between my two companions. But Helena had seen me. I waited for a signal, which did not come. She passed with such complete indifference that I might well have been a total stranger to her. She was with a young woman who walked with a gliding, cat-like step and whom I recognized by her almond-shaped eyes. It was the Annamite dancer who had dined with us at the Ambassadeurs. Behind her stalked a tall, dry gentleman with white hair and pale eyes, to whom she turned at intervals and spoke in English. They disappeared over the dune.

"Do you know those people?" asked Clotilde.

My heart was pounding, but I succeeded in speaking without betraying my emotion:

"I thought I recognized one of them, but I was mistaken."

"They belong to the smart set in Deauville," said Nathalie. And they were not mentioned again.

On the way back to the inn, my anger at Helena increased, and I denounced her to the trees along the road and the sky over my head. It was obvious that she had tricked me and played with me—and by now forgotten me. Nevertheless, I asked at the inn if anyone had left a message for me. Not a word.

That's the world of fashion for you! There are times when it is a relief to discover that there are some men in the world who are honest and some women whose friendship is real. The latest turn of event gave me a great liking for Clotilde and Nathalie. I appreciated the frank, self-reliant way in which they were starting out in life. And I began to think that there might be a place for an intelligent young man in the

"To Lion-by-the-Sea, a quiet little place with a good beach and no flies, where you don't have to put on dinner clothes every evening."

"Not like Deauville, eh? Did you take a run over to Deauville while you were in the neighborhood?"

"No, thanks! That's not my style."

An hour later, I made my way to the prison, where Durin must have been wondering if I had vanished from the earth. I felt no joy at the prospect of seeing him again; but neither was I afraid. I had kept my part of the bargain and earned my money. We were even. I would plead his case and that would be the end, so far as I was concerned. He could go get himself hanged somewhere else.

Moreover, I felt convinced that he was well informed as to what I had done. He had probably derived much amusement from learning that Helena's charm had been powerful enough to make me an accomplice in her adventures. In her my heroic-correspondence, Helena had no doubt ridiculed me for my infatuation over her and my incredible naivete. What a triumph for her, to have slipped me into the skin of Mr. Flow, as he had slipped me into that of Mr. Hooker! Ah, they were worthy of each other, the pair of them!

In any case, I was determined to leave him no doubts, by my attitude, of my role of victim, the good little boy whom a pretty woman had led by the nose.

As soon as he saw me, I knew that he was satisfied with me. He shook both my hands fraternally and with a sort of protective affection.

"I congratulate you!" he exclaimed. "You certainly do things up brown, once you start. I didn't ask all that of you."

"One cannot refuse Lady Skibbett anything," I answered, looking deliberately embarrassed.

"By the way, I'm going to scold you. You came very close to ruining her reputation. That would have been an irreparable blunder, and I should not have forgiven you for it. She told you the story of her life, and I know that she did not conceal the liking he had for her existence in the old days. Probably it was he, for he is a sorceress, who pushed you to such extravagant recklessness. I have already written her what I think about you both. You were mad to act that way. . . . Reading the newspapers, I trembled for her and also for the reputation of poor Mr. Flow. Did you ever stop to think of the responsibility you were taking on? You made inexcusable mistakes, both at Jacob's and in Rougemont Place. At Le Havre, you got out pretty well. But you acted like an idiot with that woman on The Goddess. However, all's well that ends well."

"But, Durin, the story of the car wasn't so bad as all that!"

"No, I grant you that. The red car was in Mr. Flow's tradition. And there is nothing for me to do now but thank you and assure you that your fees will be in proportion to my satisfaction. Now lets talk about my case. It'll come up on the 10th of October and will be settled in five minutes."

"I think you can count on a reprieve."

"I personally am not. Archibald is back in France and will come to the courthouse to get me. I am to go back into his service the same evening. And then—well, I believe you and I shall say good-by forever."

"Hope so, Durin."

"Are you sorry you did any of the things you did?"

"All of them, Durin. I am an honest man, and I am going to remain one."

"Well, well! Think what might have happened if you weren't. But I don't blame you for abandoning the career. Each man follow his own destiny. We shall forget each other."

"We shall forget everything," I said meaningly. "It's to your advantage as well as mine."

We looked each other in the eyes. Then his mouth relaxed, and with a slightly bitter smile, he said:

"The first time you came here, you were a child, and now I'm a man in front of me. You will thank me some day from the bottom of your heart."

We did not see each other again until the evening before his trial, when I spent a few minutes with him.

I still had no news of Helena, and I refrained from asking Durin for any.

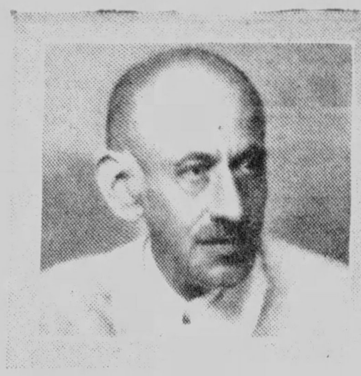
HUNDREDS OF PHYSICIANS GO 3,000 MILES FOR HIS ADVICE



Vienna's Great Internal Specialist Discusses Patients Who Are "Just Run Down"

REGIERUNGSRAT DOZENT DR. PAUL GERBER, of Vienna, is chief physician of the Department of Internal Medicine in one of the largest hospitals in that great medical center. Each year hundreds of graduate doctors from all over the world study under him there. He is a governing head of Vienna's Supreme Medical Court Board.

"IN cases of run down condition of health," Dr. Gerber says, "fresh yeast is a source of renewing energy and endurance.

"It gently stimulates intestinal action and has a good laxative effect. It reduces fermentation in the intestines and improves appetite. It is efficacious in treating skin disorders.

"The production of vitamin D, the 'sunshine' vitamin, by irradiating yeast, should be a boon to millions who are indoors most of the day. Vitamin D builds hard bones and teeth."

The astonishing ability of the fresh food, Fleischmann's Yeast, to tone up the run down system results from its unusual cleansing, purifying power.

As the millions of living yeast plants in every cake flood your intestines, they soften the clogging food wastes, stimulate the sluggish bowel muscles, check the depressing poisons that constipation caused.

Rich New Energy is Yours!

Fresh, joyful energy is your body's response to its new clean internal health. Harassing minor ailments disappear—bad breath, indigestion, unsightly skin eruptions. Easy susceptibility to headaches, sore throat, colds and other ills gives way to resistant, full-blooded whole-health!

And now, the new "irradiated" Fleischmann's Yeast brings you an added health protection, the "sunshine" vitamin D the energizing, bone- and tooth-hardening health principle of hours in the summer sun!

Start today on this easy, natural way to build up the "run down" system.

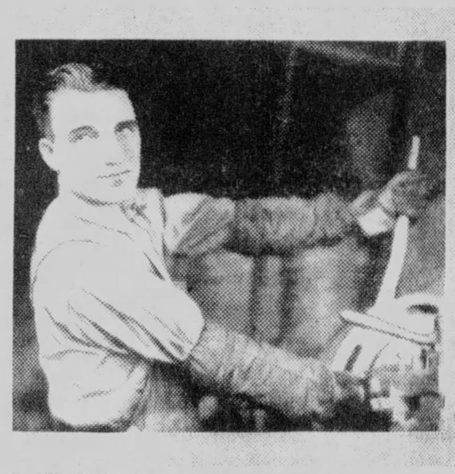
Eat three cakes of Fleischmann's Yeast regularly every day, one cake before each meal or between meals, plain or in water, cold or as hot as is pleasant to drink.

You can get Fleischmann's Yeast at grocers, restaurants and soda fountains.

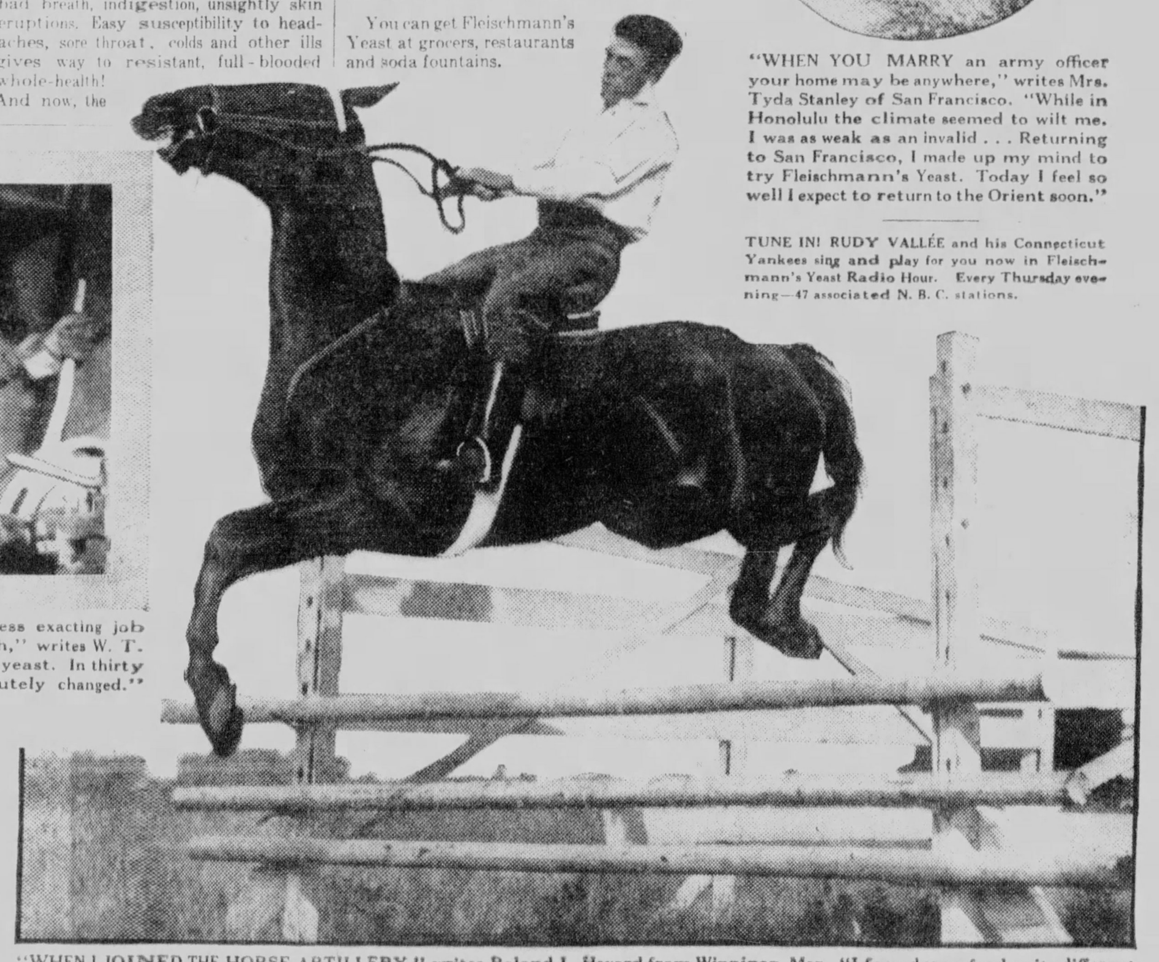
"WHEN YOU MARRY an army officer your home may be anywhere," writes Mrs. Tyda Stanley of San Francisco. "While in Honolulu the climate seemed to wilt me. I was as weak as an invalid . . . Returning to San Francisco, I made up my mind to try Fleischmann's Yeast. Today I feel so well I expect to return to the Orient soon."

TUNE IN! RUDY VALLÉE and his Connecticut Yankees sing and play for you now in Fleischmann's Yeast Radio Hour. Every Thursday evening—47 associated N. B. C. stations.



"I FACED THIS PROBLEM—taking a less exacting job with lower pay or building up my health," writes W. T. Henneman of Buffalo. "I decided to try yeast. In thirty days indigestion vanished. I was absolutely changed."

ALL FLEISCHMANN'S YEAST—in the familiar foil wrapper with the yellow label—now contains vitamin B and the "sunshine" vitamin D. It is every bit as effective as ever for baking.



"WHEN I JOINED THE HORSE ARTILLERY," writes Roland L. Havard from Winnipeg, Man., "I found army food quite different from any I had been used to—and as everyone knows, not agreeably different either. I was constipated, lost weight and couldn't eat. At the company canteen I noticed a number of the boys asking for yeast. They were so positive in recommending it that I decided to try it and in three months' time I felt better than I had since leaving the ranch."

With One Swift Gesture Dorothy Tore the Check in Three Neat Pieces.

CHAPTER VII.

Uncertainty.

WHEN Dorothy alighted from the bus it had already grown dark. She reached her boarding house tired in mind, body and spirit. Her landlady, conscious of parts of the morning, greeted her coldly.

"A gentleman called for you this afternoon and when I said you wasn't in, he went upstairs to leave a note under your door. Wouldn't leave it down here," she sniffed.

"I don't know anybody," Dorothy started in surprise, then broke off. "What did he look like, Mrs. O'Keefe?"

Mrs. O'Keefe was vague about that. "He didn't really look like no gentleman," she admitted at last.

Abandoning her questions Dorothy ran up the long flight of stairs. Who could have called? What would the message be? She thrust her key into the door and then discovered that the latch was broken. She flung open the door.

The room was in the wildest confusion. Drawers were pulled out of the bureau, her wardrobe trunk was broken open and clothes dripped from its sides, even the bed had been tumbled. Someone had been searching for something in mad haste.

Dorothy abruptly sat down and viewed the scene of desolation around her.

"Miss Prescott, Miss Prescott," bellowed the landlady up the stairs, "someone's calling for you on the phone down here."

Dorothy's bewildered, frightened expression deepened. No one in New York knew her address or phone number.

When she came downstairs Mrs. O'Keefe was fluttering about the hall. In considerable agitation she pointed to the telephone receiver, which dangled from the wall.

"You oughtn't to keep your fellow waiting so long," she said reprovingly, "he might hang up on you some fine day." With an unusual burst of industry she busied herself at some unnecessary dusting of the hall furniture.

Dorothy stood regarding her a moment. Mrs. O'Keefe whisked away the harder, apparently unconscious of her guest's scrutiny. At last Dorothy said decisively, "Mrs. O'Keefe, would you mind going inside a moment?"

Mrs. O'Keefe gave her one insulted look, then grandly entered her own room and banged the door. But, as Dorothy wisely suspected, her outraged dignity did not prevent her from ridiculously applying an ear at the keyhole.

The telephone began a series of morose clackings. Dorothy rose on tiptoe toward the mouthpiece, uncomfortably high on the wall. For a moment she wished vainly for the day of television. How she would like a snapshot of that mysterious person on the other end.

Then, "Hello," she said faintly.

"This is Hugh Forisee," came the immediate answer, "please forgive me for calling, but I couldn't wait three days. I might as well confess I followed you last night in the cab and took down your address. Wouldn't you like to forgive me and put in a quiet evening with me for a change? I've lots to tell you."

For a moment she was furiously angry. What right had he to follow her, what right to frighten her so? Cooler thoughts followed. Perhaps she did have something to learn from him. She was honest enough to know also that her very indignation was emphasized, magnified by a desire to see him again, to see again that admiring light in his eyes. Her cheeks burned as she remembered how they had parted the night before. But his courteous, eager voice had held no hint that he remembered.

At last, hesitatingly, she agreed to meet him at Washington Square, just at the Arch. As his receiver clicked she had a moment of regret. Restlessly she pushed it away. As she changed into a fresh, simple afternoon dress and looked in the mirror at her shining eyes, she wondered that she was tired no more. Swiftly she put the room to rights; pushed back drawers, hung up garments, made her bed and then viewed the final result with satisfaction. Nothing was missing, nothing except some personal letters, taken from her trunk. That puzzled her for a moment, but she finally decided that she must have destroyed them herself. No one would be so mad as to steal personal letters. How fortunate, she thought, with a shudder at the closeness of her escape, that the diamonds had been taken from the room that morning.

The handkerchief in which they had been wrapped still lay, undisturbed, on her bureau top. Just before she clicked off the light she carefully folded it, crumpled a little now, and tucked it into an envelope. Miss Prescott meant to do a bit of sleuthing. As she passed through the downstairs hall, her landlady's half open door banged smartly shut. Dorothy smiled at that.

Hugh was waiting impatiently when she reached the Square. From half a block away she saw him pacing up and down, taking long, even pulls on a pipe. The pipe went into his pocket at sight of her. He put out both hands and looked keenly into her eyes while the traffic of the avenue swirled unheedingly past them. His glance told Dorothy how fresh she looked, how desirable.

"Gee, it's great to see you," his words said.

This was going to be hard, harder than she expected. For a fraction of a moment Dorothy hesitated, then she said nervously, "I've got something of yours. You must have dropped it last night."

She had an instant of wild panic as she held out the handkerchief to him. Wonderingly he accepted it, flinched at the odor of the perfume, and tossed it back.

"Not mine," he said, adding in an injured tone, "what made you think I'd put on scent just because I was going to a masquerade?"

Dorothy felt as all amateur detectives must feel at times. What a vicious, blundering fool she had been! Of course her suspicions had been absurd. Hugh had never seen the handkerchief before. That was obvious in his brief, incurious glance. Haltingly she apologized for her error.

"It's not as serious as that," he said laughingly. "You act as if you'd put a knife in my back."

Dorothy flinched at his light words, flinched before their accuracy. In her humiliation she considered telling him everything, but he spoke as her decision was trembling in the balance, and the moment was over.

Quite unconscious of what was passing through her mind, Hugh attempted to and eventually succeeded in raising her spirits to the level of his own. Arm in arm they walked to a nearby restaurant, a small, cozy, man's sort of restaurant with sawdust on the floor, rough, pine tables, rather doubtful linen but food of unbelievable succulency.

"No, don't take crabs here, Bella, Baltimore's the place for crabs," protested a sportily dressed fat man to his sportily dressed fat companion, "but if it's oysters you want—" he rolled his eyes to heaven, indicating the vastly superior qualities of Henry's oysters to other, lesser oysters.

Hugh and Dorothy grinned delightedly at each other. Over a steak, fully three inches thick, garnished lovingly with curls of mushrooms and surrounded by a golden border of mashed sweet potatoes, Hugh recounted the remainder of his adventures. He had boldly returned to the Hartwells' for his car and luckily had encountered and mingled with the other guests as they were leaving. Apparently no one had missed him. He dared even to reenter the house to thank Mrs. Hartwell for a pleasant evening. Of Ruth Bradford he said nothing. He brought his story to a triumphant close and waited for her to speak.

"Did you see the papers today?" she began slowly.

"Of course, those who run away—" he began just as slowly.

"You knew I hadn't a ticket—a ticket of my own?" she asked. He nodded. With gathering embarrassment, her words stumbling and faltering, she told him how she found Ruth Bradford's ticket. It was hard to say that name, but say it she did. The reasons for her unwisdom in crashing the Hartwell Ball she did not mention. Let him think she was a climber, an adventuress, if he wished, she thought stormily.

Apparently he thought nothing of the kind. He drew a long breath of relief as her words faltered to a close. His forgotten steak he pushed aside.

"I'm glad you told me that," he said, leaning over the table toward her. "Of course, I recognized you not," he admitted sheepishly, "until after I'd left you. But I knew that I had seen you before."

Dorothy started. Had he suspected her then after he had left her? Was Hugh Forisee responsible for that search of her room? She tapped her spoon nervously on the edge of a saucer. Abruptly, spurring herself every inch of the way, she told him of the intruder and the wreck of her room.

Hugh's tan face paled. "What could they have wanted?" he exclaimed.

Dorothy paused, a long pause, and Hugh's eyes clouded. At last, "I don't know," she said almost in a whisper.

He too waited a moment before speaking, as if he thought she had something to add. When she did not speak he said, "Well, you must get out of there at once. Why don't you try a Y. W. C. A.?"

"You have to have character references there," answered Dorothy thoughtlessly. She broke off in confusion at the surprise in his eyes.

After all it was not a very happy dinner, Dorothy realized as she left him. He had cleared her doubts of him, but what of his doubts of her? There was nothing for her to do but clear them herself. She got on an uptown bus and rode alone to the public library, determined to take the first step in that campaign.

Directed to the third floor she entered a large, brown room filled with an intricate labyrinth of aisles composed of tall, lettered filing cabinets. She stood uncertainly a moment and an obliging, good looking youth approached her.

"Perhaps I could help," he suggested. He would be glad, his manner indicated, to help so pretty a girl.

"I want to look up crests," she said vaguely.

"Any particular kind of crests?" he asked. "French, English, Spanish, Italian?"

French, English, Spanish, Italian, he had said them so glibly. She was indeed seeking a needle, and among the haystacks of four nations.

"I don't know," she confessed ruefully. Impulsively she took the handkerchief from her bag and handed it to him. "I want to know whose crest that is," she said.

"Oh dear," he said, his face clearing, "that should be easy. If I'm not mistaken that's a pretty famous one. Wait a minute."

A Friend in need

"A Mother Has Hour Long Moments"

How Would You Have Met This Emergency?

IT usually happens with the first baby. Mother has not long been at "the greatest job in the world." Perhaps she has been a very good mother, and baby has been a very good baby. Then comes the night when a piteous wail is the first warning that you have a sick baby. When the doctor comes he will know what it is. Meantime, what to do?

Is there a bottle of Castoria in your medicine cabinet now? There should be, if you have children! It's the one thing a mother may turn to in such emergencies. It is a pure vegetable product that can never do any harm. Its almost instant relief will have your infant back to sleep before you could summon a neighbor's aid. And the wisest mother could give you no sounder advice than to comfort the child with Castoria. It may be the stomach, or it may be the little bowels; or a fretful, feverish condition from some unknown cause. Castoria is always a safe and sensible thing to give.

Mothers, watch your child's tongue and breath and appetite. Prompt usage of Fletcher's Castoria will avoid many little upsets that affect the appetite and digestion and hold a child back.

Every druggist has Fletcher's Castoria.

White Lies — By Joan Clayton

He returned with Burke's Peerage and together they flipped through the pages. "Here it is," he exclaimed at last. "I was sure I'd seen it before."

Eagerly she read the paragraph. It was printed in italics beside a small design identical with the one on the handkerchief.

"Two lions rampant over a shield which carries the inscription, 'Audentes Fortuna Juvat' (Fortune favors the bold). The crest of the Montmorency family. The last Earl of Montmorency was killed on the hunting field in 1710 and the title reverted to the crown."

1710! No one had been entitled to the use of that crest since the last Earl of Montmorency had broken his handsome neck more than two hundred years before! Dorothy felt as if someone had dashed cold water in her face; she turned from the book and stumbled from the room.

The young librarian stared in bewilderment after her.

The following morning, for the first time, Dorothy found Mrs. O'Keefe's door firmly closed when she came downstairs. From inside she could hear various rustlings which suggested that the landlady was awake and about. She paused a moment and then boldly knocked. Mrs. O'Keefe, her head, as it always was by day, festooned with curl papers, reluctantly admitted her to the littered, disorderly room and swept a pile of magazines from a chair to the floor. Ignoring the invitation Dorothy stood to make the brief announcement. Upon hearing that she meant immediately to move, the landlady collapsed dramatically into the chair which Dorothy had declined and, thereupon, burst into tears.

"I didn't like the looks of that rough fella callin' for you yesterday afternoon," she wailed. "If you leave my roof there's no telling what might happen. No woman with a mother's heart could let you go."

Considerably perturbed, Dorothy viewed the quivering bulk of her "adoptive mother." She was determined to stay no longer and was equally determined that Mrs. O'Keefe should suspect none of her reasons for leaving. As well call the newspapers.

Sensing an indecision which did not exist, the stricken landlady protested that she kept a decent house and Dorothy could find no decenter for the money.

Dorothy glanced down at her pocketbook, sighed, surrendered. "Oh, all right," she said, "I'll pay you two weeks' rent in lieu of notice."

"Of course you know you're entitled only to the rest of this week," she continued relentlessly.

Her grief somewhat assuaged, Mrs. O'Keefe graciously volunteered to help with the packing. "Though, I don't know when I'll get that room rented, dearie. It's a hard season," she said mournfully. It was rather a game between the two of them. Both knew and politely pretended that the other didn't know she was expecting double rent from that room the next two weeks.

Out in the open air Dorothy shrugged her shoulders and shook off the last of Leroy Street. Her next landlady, she decided, should have a large and growing family, a completely absorbing family. At the corner she bought her newspaper. Stories of the Hartwell diamond robbery had retreated from the front pages of all except the tabloids, giving way to a new and gaudy murder and the latest news from the White House. But on the second and third pages the police mysteriously announced fresh clues to the identity of the girl in white. Even though she knew well enough that police always announce fresh clues Dorothy was genuinely troubled, then firmly she thrust the Hartwell diamonds from her mind and turned to the want ads. Escaping from Leroy Street, escaping from the prying eyes of Mrs. O'Keefe was her present problem.

Checking through the long columns, she saw the following:

> WANTED—A room-mate that's refined but even if she's not refined must mind her own business. To share part of expenses. Lulu Lorrilard, 2110 Riverside Drive.

Dorothy chuckled and a passer-by looked surprised that any girl could be so bright at eight o'clock in the morning. A careful examination of the other advertisements, dreary in spite of their optimistic promises of cheery rooms, comfortable rooms with large bay windows, laundry privileges and telephone service, was more depressing. Dorothy's eyes returned to that odd and forward request.

Yesterday she had had no luncheon worthy of the name. Today Dorothy determined, if possible, to stretch her one hour to two; at one fell blow to dispose of the Hartwell diamonds and her future residence. When she reached Holt & Company, Miss Bloom was in a rarely affable mood, still delighted over the boom business of the day before.

"Go on, sweetheart," urged the gracious buyer at Dorothy's request, "take all the time you want with your boy friend."

Her boy friend! Rannie! Dorothy blushed and smiled. She hardly knew why she blushed. Only considering Rannie, dear as he was, a "boy friend" in Miss Bloom's special sense seemed so ridiculous. Her thoughts wandered on, and there, though she would never have admitted it, lay the reason for her blush.

All morning long she looked at the clock at intervals fifteen minutes apart. Promptly at twelve she pulled on her hat and coat, eager to escape a plaintive request for "just one more little model." As she streaked for the elevator she caught sight of Mellicent, lingering near a rack of marked down wraps. Their eyes crossed. Mellicent's face broke into a sweet and curious smile. Dorothy felt a throb of fear. Why, she wondered, should Mellicent smile in that particular fashion, when they had avoided each other for days?

But she soon dismissed the topic for the more engrossing one of her prospective roommate. All the way to Riverside Drive, sitting aloft on the uptown bus, she indulged in gay and roving fancies.

CHAPTER VIII.

WHEN the bus pulled up at 120th Street, Dorothy's eyes stretched at a mammoth white building with its many windows flashing in the sunshine and looking down on the long gray coil of the Hudson, where strings of little boats plied restlessly to and fro. Could this be right? She looked at the number. Surely no one who lived in such imposing surroundings could have the need of a roommate "to share part of expensey." Rather vexed at what had begun to appear a useless waste of time she determined that since she had made the trip she would go through with the interview.

A doorman in bottle-green bounded forward and respectfully held back the door for her. She entered the dim, warm darkness of the lobby a little hesitatingly. Though the heavy leather divans, the glossy green palms, escaped good taste they spoke of blantant luxury. Gathering courage she walked to the elevator and punched the bell.

On the fifth floor she paused before a bronze knocker and clacked vigorously. Could Miss Lorrilard be the manager of a girls' club?

From within Dorothy heard an agitated splashing of water, then running footsteps. The door was flung open and the person who was responsible dashed back toward the bathroom, leaving round puddles of water on the polished floor. Dorothy had only a glimpse of flashing white legs, a taut green negligee and a face, the strangest face she had ever seen—gray, blobby, featureless, inhuman as an obelisk.

"Sit down," floated back to her, "and I'll finish my bath."

That face! Surely that face could not be attached to that slender, lithe body. Dorothy was in the mood for no more mysteries. Ignoring the sprawling, comfortable chairs she started quietly toward the outer door.

"Take a cigarette if you're bored," called the voice at once, "I'm a pig to keep on sitting in the tub, but this beauty mask won't come off, without my face following, for another ten minutes."

So that was it! Dorothy had seen women in beauty shops, their faces buried beneath gray layers of clay, long cigarette holders pouring forth smoke like the smoke from volcanoes. Really, Dorothy told herself sternly, she must control her nerves. She had seen enough high-strung, neurotic women around Holt & Company to know the danger of nerves.

She helped herself to a cigarette and strolled about the lavish living-room. It was a slap-dash sort of place, piled with footstools and ottomans, cigarette stands, cushions, photographs with illegible signatures and inscriptions that were not. One young man smiled down over, "Well, you fooled me in the end." Lamps bloomed from the floor just as if it were midnight, instead of noon. Every vestige of sunlight was cut off by heavy, drawn curtains. Dorothy pulled one aside and looked intently down at the shifting panorama of the Hudson.

"Ah, a nature lover!" she heard behind her. Dorothy dropped the curtain, turned pink and whirled to meet Miss Lulu Lorrilard.

It would seem a simple thing to describe Lulu Lorrilard as she stood, catching a green negligee about her, her red hair held loosely by its minimum of three pins, but no one of the many who tried to describe her, in any of her varying moods, ever succeeded. A Yale senior once thought he had, but then he read into his composition his own memories and imaginings of her. When you say she had red hair, blue-green eyes, and skin finely grained as a child's, what have you? She was too plastic, her expressions too variable, even for so cold and accurate a thing as photography. Lulu could look forty, and sometimes did; twenty, a sophisticated twenty, and often did. The best description of her was perhaps in the words of a man who admired rather than loved her: "She's a dead-game sport."

Dorothy stared at her as unashamedly as if she had been looking at a painting.

"Don't blush, dearie," grinned Lulu. "Sunlight's all right when you're your age, but wait till you're mine."

"Surely—" protested Dorothy. Lulu looked no more than a year or so older than herself.

"Don't burst into tears," counselled Lulu. "I'm not a candidate for the old ladies' home—not yet." She sighed lugubriously.

Dorothy laughed. But she couldn't take her eyes away from the other girl's hair, which burned through the artificial dusk like living flame.

Lulu's smile flashed. "Right again," she said, "it comes out of a bottle—but it's great while it lasts." Lazily she reached up and pulled a couple of pins. Her hair showered about her.

"Well," she stretched her arms and yawned, "I always like myself when I've just gone through the entire treatment and this time you had to be the victim." That was what always made women and some men suspicious of her—she admitted everything.

"I—I loved it," said Dorothy, "I—I—"

"I'll be purring in a minute," warned Lulu. Then, abruptly, "Did you come about the room?"

Dorothy confessed she had. She also confessed that she was sure she couldn't afford to share Lulu's apartment.

"How much did you pay where you were?"

"Seven dollars a week."

"Seven dollars a week," mused Lulu, "funny, that's just what I'm asking."

In vain Dorothy protested. Lulu had determined during their brief conversation that Dorothy should be her room-mate, and Lulu always had her own way.

"You may be a real dyed-in-the-wool lady for all I know; I suspect you of it." She laughed. "But I don't care. I like you."

Like others before her Dorothy yielded. When fifteen minutes later she started back downtown she had agreed to move that very evening.

Rannie was waiting impatiently for her at Brownlee's when she appeared for the appointment fifteen minutes late.

"I thought you'd thrown me down," he said reproachfully.

At her contrite smile his dignity melted, melted so perceptibly that Dorothy was at once on guard. Rannie was always crowding her a bit emotionally and she didn't want him to crowd her that way. She just wanted to be—friends.

They selected a partially curtained booth, apart from the clattering, noisy crowd and, because of Dorothy's deftness, sat on opposite sides of the table.

"Well," said Rannie, "what is it?"

In a low, hurried tone she told him the whole story from the beginning, stopping now and then to answer his startled questions. She left out only one fact, which, she felt had nothing to do with the story, the fact that she had seen Hugh Ferisee since the night of the ball. Something evasive in her voice or eyes must have warned him.

"Have you seen the guy who took you home?" he demanded.

"Once," she said in a low voice. Absurd, but she hadn't wanted him to know that.

Rannie made up his mind immediately. "Of course," he declared, "that guy planted them on you and is trying to get them back."

"Oh, no," protested Dorothy with burning cheeks, "that's impossible. He doesn't know I have them. The man who went through my room wasn't Hugh. He couldn't have been, from Mrs. O'Keefe's description."

"Did you ever hear of accomplices?" asked Rannie bitterly. "When did you start calling him Hugh?"

Dorothy stood up, anger in her eyes. "Well," she said, "if that's how you feel I'll go somewhere else for help."

Rannie leaped to his feet. "Don't be foolish," he said, "I'm sorry. You can't keep those diamonds. The Hartwell diamonds are famous. They're bound to be traced and then where will you be? Where are they now?"

Dorothy was as willing to make up as he was. "At the City Savings Bank," she said tremulously.

"Go out and get them," said Rannie. "I'll see that Ferisee doesn't get his fingers on them. My mother has a private detective and I'll get him to return them this afternoon, and no questions asked."

"Oh, Rannie," she said gratefully, "you're awfully good to me."

"Not as good as I'd like to be," he answered sulkily.

At that Dorothy left, hastily. She walked the block to the City Savings Bank with lifted spirits. The diamond were to pass from her possession back to their rightful owners. As for Rannie and his temporary pique, she knew well enough she could handle that. Perhaps, she thought, that was one of the faults with Rannie.

As she walked from the bank, her bag clutched more tightly beneath her arm, she wondered what the hurrying crowds would think if they knew she had entered the bank with an empty pocketbook and left with $500,000 worth of diamonds.

"Here they are," she said to Rannie, as she reentered the booth. She tossed her pocketbook to him.

He looked quickly around to see that they were unobserved and then cautiously drew the flashing necklace into the light. His expression changed. He frowned, drew the necklace farther into the light, and stared at it intently.

"My word," he said slowly, "there's something funny here. I know diamonds. These aren't diamonds—they're only paste."

The color drained from Dorothy's face. Half fainting she leaned against the hard back of her seat. Suddenly she saw Rannie stuff a napkin over the exposed necklace. She heard a harsh voice:

"I've caught you!"

At last, after what to her seemed years, Dorothy raised her fear-blind eyes. For a moment she could not realize that the furious man who stood clenching the edge of the table, was Horace Holt, of Holt & Company.

What was Horace Holt doing here? A memory of Mellicent's curiously sweet smile of the morning flashed across her mind. Mellicent she knew, had betrayed her. "Horace Holt's" first words confirmed her belief.

"Miss, you're fired," he said. "Employees of my store keep no dates with my son. Go back to the store this moment and turn in your time."

Dorothy opened her mouth but no words came. Both she and Rannie looked at him in speechless amazement. Then Holt turned on Rannie, his voice quivering with rage, "As for you, sir—you can go out home and pack up. You and your mother will leave tonight for the ranch."

Rannie had always been terrified of his father but he meant that Dorothy should never guess that. Struggling frantically for self possession, he found his voice, a hard, unnatural voice, as different as possible from his usual one.

"Sit down," he said sharply, "before you make fools of the three of us."

Even in their secluded position they were attracting a great deal of attention from the idle luncheon crowd. Many eyes turned curiously in their direction and a smartly hatted feminine head craned around the next booth. There was nothing quiet about Holt, Sr.

"No need for me to sit down," he bit off, "the discussion is ended."

"You're mistaken—it isn't," said Rannie. "In the first place, I'm not going to the ranch."

"You'll go to the ranch or you'll get not another penny from me. I won't support all the hoydens in town."

Rannie pushed back the table and sprang to his feet. As he did the napkin covering the necklace partially slipped from his grasp and Holt's sharp eyes caught sight of the gold-finite out beneath. He reached for the napkin, but Rannie grabbed his arm.

"What have you got there?" Holt barked. "Give it here. I'll see my money paid for it."

"I'm not a kid to be bullied and mistreated by you, that's over," said Rannie in his loudest tone. "I have money of my own and you know it. If I choose to give Miss Black a present that's my affair."

"Oh, that's it." Horace Holt turned on Dorothy the most contemptuous look she had ever received in her entire eighteen years. "So you're the new member of my son's ensemble," he sneered.

"No, no," Dorothy cried in a low, stricken voice.

Rannie's fists clenched fell to his sides. He was silent a long moment then, abruptly, he addressed himself to his father.

"Suppose," he said coolly, "I told you that you were speaking to your future daughter-in-law."

Dorothy's handbag clattered to the floor. She leaned over to pick it up. The manager of the restaurant, a competent, cold-faced woman with eyes of agate, approached the two angry men who stood facing each other across the narrow table.

"I'm sorry," she said, "we can't permit a disturbance here."

Holt whirled around to pour his wrath upon the intruder.

"I'm Horace Holt," he declared arrogantly. "I make disturbances where I please. Now get out."

"I don't care if you're the Prince of Wales," snapped the woman. "Sit down and stop making a nuisance of yourself or I'll call the police."

"Call away," barked Holt, "and see how long you keep your job after the damage suit I file."

Subtly the attitude of the manager dissolved, assumed a different pattern. Her eyes, touched by a stock, too sweet smile, became a fraction more soft.

"But—but, Mr. Holt," she protested in an altered voice, "you must be fair. Please sit down, at least."

He lowered himself to his chair beside Dorothy and [illegible] at last [illegible] toward [illegible] far end.

"I'll sit down," he conceded, "I've got plenty to say."

As the manager, her curiosity thoroughly aroused, withdrawing near, he spoke again. "Now [illegible] about your [illegible]" He broke off with outrage [illegible]

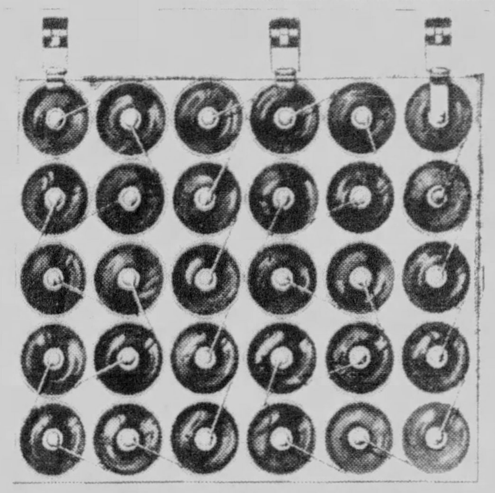
EVEREADY LAYERBILT CONSTRUCTION

Diagram illustrating the simplicity of the Eveready Layerbilt construction. Only two broad metal bands and only five soldered connections. No waste spaces. It's all battery. Layerbilt construction is an exclusive Eveready feature. Only Eveready makes Layerbilt Batteries.



CYLINDRICAL CELL CONSTRUCTION

Diagram illustrating the construction of a cylindrical cell "B" battery. Two solderings per cell, or 60 in all, and 29 fine wires—89 chances for trouble. Note waste spaces between cells.

HERE IS WHAT IS INSIDE

YOUR "B" BATTERIES

THESE diagrams reveal the insides of "B" batteries. One is the old-fashioned kind, assembled of separate, individual cells, and requiring 29 fine wires, 60 solderings. Such cells can be round, hexagonal, square or what-not, and still those 89 places for trouble are inside the battery.

The other type is the famous, unique Eveready Layerbilt. It is built of flat cells which are not independent but *inter*dependent. They make connections automatically. Only two broad connecting bands are needed, each 3/8 inch wide. There are but five solderings. The flat cells pack more materials inside the battery and so it is not only more reliable and trouble-proof, but longer lasting and more economical. Don't forget that Eveready Layerbilts are sold in such tremendous volume that they move quickly out of dealers' stocks, thus assuring your receiving fresh "B" batteries. You'll want the Eveready Layerbilt, of course—just be sure to look for the name on the label.

How Science Unravels Crime Mysteries in the Foreign Detective Police Laboratories

[illegible] Spain [illegible] Spanish [illegible] Mary [illegible] Romanetti [illegible] and interference on behalf of those who had been wronged. One day he was traveling with some of his followers when he heard shouts of distress coming from a little wood on the left of the road. Leaping into the bush, Romanetti ordered his escort to follow him, and rushed to see what it was all about. He came into an opening in the forest where stood an empty motor car.

Peering cautiously into the bushes, he caught sight with a sigh of [illegible] who were running away. A pretty girl and her father [illegible] were found to be Mr. [illegible] Twomey and her father, of Chicago. Not [illegible] the [illegible] who had [illegible] to Ajaccio, Romanetti dispersed [illegible] into the woods and sent [illegible] own hands to drive the car [illegible].

Such instances of staunch [illegible] are plentiful [illegible] the career of the king of [illegible] and I could not tell [illegible] were returning from [illegible] to [illegible] to [illegible] possible to spend a night with Romanetti. I had followed his exploits with interest. I felt I knew how I could approach him without being in peril of collision with the authorities. Thus, one day I set out from the pretty town of Ajaccio, a letter with the huge seal of Romanetti in my pocket as passport.

It was dusk when I reached the little village where the two men who had offered to guide me to Romanetti were waiting. From here the remainder of the journey would be a toilsome climb through the dense undergrowth. The real "bush" was before me. More than once I looked back regretfully at the tiny houses clinging fantastically to the steep sides of the gray rock. We could only advance slowly and in single file, and long before we reached the narrow gully which led to one of the bandit's retreats I wished I had not come. The night, black and treacherous, silent and perfumed, laden with the sharp tang of pines and gorse, enveloped me like a mantle.

At last my two guides, one in front and one behind, hissed cautiously; it was the signal to halt; it was a welcome signal, for my lungs were laboring from the steady climb, stumble and recovery of the last two hours. I looked up at the starry sky, breathing deeply. Around me I could see nothing but vague outlines of rocks and stunted trees; and every darker shape was pregnant with unknown dangers.

Below, far below, was the sea, only visible because its edge was sharply indicated by a few twinkling lights. Abruptly a twig cracked a few yards away and with a click an electric torch [illegible] with its blinding rays; [illegible] then [illegible] by [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Spices for Holiday Goodies

By Mrs. Christine Frederick,

The Distinguished Authority on Household Efficiency.

THE very word "spice" conjures up a vision of far-away tropical isles, and the whole history of these aromatic food seasonings has been associated with romantic story and even with tragic bloody wars. In olden times spices were held in high esteem and formed part of the tribute paid to king-like Solomon. Later the patricians of Rome used them lavishly in incense and in funeral rites.

When the housewife makes a holiday fruit cake or stuffs the Christmas turkey, she may use the fragrant seasonings sent to her from a dozen distant lands—cinnamon, nutmeg, clove or cardamon, sage, savory or thyme. These and other varied vegetable perfumes are the real secrets of delicious holiday goodies and dishes fit for kings. The more familiar she becomes with blending the right spice or seasoning for sauce, pudding or stuffing, the more interesting and truly tasteful her holiday preparations and menus will prove.

Since the real perfume and flavor of these seasonings is contained in their essential oils, the housewife will no more think of letting them stand open and uncorked that she will permit her toilet perfumes to remain without stoppers. Even in their ground or whole form, the aroma and distinctive pungency which is their sole value escapes rapidly. So to buy spices and let them stand in paper bags, or to purchase them in cartons of cardboard and leave them torn open is only to evaporate their odor and make them valueless as food flavorings. It is also a mistake to transfer spice contents into supposedly special glass spice containers which often have useless and overly large holes to let out the odor and leave nothing but tasteless residue behind.

The best form in which to purchase spices is in small tin boxes, each lid furnished with a very small circle of perforated holes and to be used for shaking as much or as little as desired. In this form the holes can be adjusted, as they are protected by a little tin shield or adjuster which shuts the box, making it airtight when standing on the shelf. While adulteration of spices is much less practised than formerly, it pays to buy the best of all spices. Cheap, inferior spices contain starch, ground shells and other bulk filling materials which rob them of their strength and impair their flavor.

Before starting on holiday preparations, clean out your spice cabinet entirely—throw away all opened packets and fill it with small tin boxes of the very best and most trustworthy brands. These are more often sold at the druggist's than at the grocer's.

And with what flavoring perfumes shall the housewife arrange and stock her holiday pantry shelf? While all spices are of vegetable origin, perhaps they are best classified according to their form and plant origins as well as culinary purposes. Here is a brief "Who's Who in Spiceland":

Whole Leaves—Bayleaf, dill, fennel, marjoram, mint, sage, Summer savory, tarragon, thyme.

Whole Seeds or Pods—Aniseed, capers, cardamon, caraway, celery seed, coriander, nutmeg, poppy.

Roots and Other Forms—Allspice, cinnamon, cloves, ginger, horseradish, mace, mustard, nutmeg; pepper, white, black, cayenne, paprika.

Allspice, for example, is not a mixture of "all-spice," as some may suppose, but the pea-size fruit of a West Indian tree called the "all-spice" only from its fancied resemblance to a bouquet of mixed spices. Caraway seeds, familiar to most, are the deep brown and highly aromatic seeds of a plant growing wild in Holland and Germany—now cultivated in California and used in breads, and in Holland for flavoring cheese and for other baking purposes. Aniseed, the minute seed of an annual plant growing profusely in Germany, out of which the famed "kimmel" cordial is made, and popular for cookies, is also used as a flavoring for cake and confectionery.

Cardamon seeds do not deserve the neglect in which the American housewife leaves them. They are the triangular white pod of a reed-like plant native to the mountains of India and to the island of Jamaica. Each pod contains several small, dark seeds, whose odor seems a cross between vanilla and lemon or quince—a delicious perfumery flavor when added to cake, to a dish of stewed prunes, apple sauce or a batch of nut cookies.

Cinnamon, of course, is bark. Cloves are unopened flower buds. Ginger is a root. Nutmegs are a large seed, of which the outer covering, in a thick orange form, is the familiar Mace.

Both black and white pepper are the dried berry-like fruit of a perennial climbing shrub. What the housewife calls a "peppercorn" is the immature tiny fruit or berry dried until its outside skin is shriveled. When the entire berry is ground we have black pepper, or if the dark outer shell is first removed, then we have white pepper—less pungent, but really flavorful. Totally different are paprika, which is the ground pulp of a dried sweet pepper pod, a vegetable which bears not a bit of resemblance to the true pepper plant; and Cayenne—violent and stinging—which is made from the powdered dried pod of the "spur" Chili pepper. Tabasco is the ground pod of a special long-fruited pepper.

"All peppers," says my informing data, "should be kept from exposure to moisture, the air or sunlight." There, Mrs. Housewife, is a tip for you!

And now for a word about the dried leaf seasonings so necessary to make holiday poultry ooze with rich, fragrant stuffings. Sage may be the most popular, but a mixture of sage with Summer savory and a small pinch of marjoram or thyme is less coarse and crude and really more sophisticated. Thyme, loved by the Italians, but equally by Shakespeare, whose "I know a bank where the wild thyme grows," has become immortal, is a delicious fragrance, and one which should see more use in dishes like tomato-macaroni, fish sauces and so forth. In buying any leaf seasoning, do not buy the cheap, inferior sticks and leaves type of quality, but the leaf alone.

For those who do not wish to blend their own, there are mixed poultry and mixed cake spices, and if of a reliable brand are often better than trying to trust to hand mixing or guesswork. And while liquid commercial flavorings do not come into the scope of this article, this is the time to mention a new black walnut flavoring extract—superior for all nut cakes and cookies and pleasing and new to family food flavors.

Cooking may be a science, but seasoning is an art. Just a peppercorn or two, a branch of bay—and a monotonous gravy is transformed. A sprinkle of anise in an ordinary cake batter; a pinch of sage in the family meat loaf; a spread of mustard before frying the steak; cloves in cider poured over the baked ham; nutmeg in pumpkin, ginger with pineapple—oh, the art of the seasoner is like that of the magician, conjuring forth from what are matter-of-fact foods, the flavor, the aroma, the perfume of romance.

Have you your holiday spice shelves in order, filled with new, fresh, aromatic aids to holiday cooking?

White Lies

By Joan Clayton

As he draped Dorothy's coat on his overcoat, reached for his hat, He stuffed two packages of napkins, not all into Dorothy's bag and started across to her.

"Come on, Dorothy," he said, "we'll leave father to himself in peace. I'm sure he has nothing to say of interest to either of us."

Dorothy stole a sidewise glance at Holt. She was amazed at the change in him, as he sat, one fist still clenched lying across the table. The vitality, the force of the man seemed drained away. For the first time she realized he must be old, an old man, defeated for all his arrogance.

"Please let me by," she said more gently than she had intended.

He turned quickly, completely barring the way.

"Sit down, miss," he said, "you might as well understand you'll get nothing by marrying my son. His money—"

He broke off scornfully. "You heard him speak of his money. He has four thousand a year from his grandfather, and I settle his bills every quarter. If he marries you he'll never get another penny from me."

"I don't want your money," she said.

Either Holt did not hear or choose not to hear. With his usual harsh abruptness, he pulled out his check book, scribbled rapidly, tore out a check and tossed it toward her.

"Take a vacation," he said, rising, "go to Europe. Go anywhere. But get out of New York, or I'll see that you do."

The check was made out to cash and was for $10,000. Curiously Dorothy examined the crabbed handwriting, examined it curiously and without anger. She could feel no anger for one whose whole philosophy was so different from her own; it would have been like despising a foreigner for failing to understand English. Horace Holt had set the price of his only son at $10,000. How like him that was; a merchant prince, he believed he could buy anything. She looked from the check toward Rannie. So Horace Holt believed she would sell out.

Almost as if she wished to prolong the moment, Dorothy balanced the check in her hands, so that it swayed gently in the stirring, heated air. Then, with one swift gesture, she tore it in three neat pieces and dropped them to the floor.

"If it's of any interest to you, Mr. Holt," she said clearly, "I'll never marry your son. I don't want to. Now please let me pass."

Horace Holt stared at her as if he thought she had gone mad. She knew that he thought her a fool, either that or a clever adventuress, willing to gamble for future stakes.

Ungracefully, he moved aside. "I'll never offer you another cent," he said flatly. Dorothy did not trouble to answer, so useless did she know any answer to be.

Rannie rose and took one step in her direction.

"You didn't mean that, didn't mean that you'd never marry me, did you?" he demanded. He continued in a low voice, "I wasn't going to say anything for a long time." She remained silent. Finding no comfort in her face he said quickly, "There's lots of time to think about it."

Don't answer, don't answer now, his eyes begged, think about it.

He was so good looking, so young, so hurt. Dorothy slid her hand into his and withdrew it as

With a World of Gifts to choose from they selected FURNITURE

A GIFT for the home! What pleasant possibilities, what delightful anticipations! Rare, indeed, is the present that brings so much lasting satisfaction; so much permanent pleasure. And after all, isn't a gift of furniture the most logical, the most enduringly profitable of all investments?

Good furnishings are more than mere merchandise. They are elements that make our dreams come true; a constant source of inspiration, and a definite aid to advancement. Thus, the saying: "First—furnish your home," is indeed sound counsel.

In this modern age you are judged by the appearance of your home. Scanty, inappropriate furnishings do you a real injustice; they give your guests an unfavorable impression that even your gracious manner and clever conversation cannot offset.

And it is so easy—so simple, to turn this handicap into a real help; to make home furnishings speak in your favor. Just a few new pieces, carefully selected, will "dress up" your home and make a world of difference.

How about one or two occasional chairs, to replace those old-fashioned ones that have served their day? A new davenport, perhaps, or some attractive floor coverings; new furnishings for the sun parlor and breakfast nook; a modern, comfortable suite for the spare bedroom; an entire dining suite of enduring design. These are things within the scope of even a modest Family Budget. And what a difference they will make!

The money you put into modern furnishings is not an expense. It is a sound investment that brings dividends of delight. But dressing up your home is more than a matter of personal satisfaction. Those new acquaintances you wish to make—those interesting, worthwhile people you want to know—will judge you by what your rooms reveal. What your furnishings say about you, depends entirely upon what you do about them.

And to furnish a home so that it keeps pace with your position is simpler than you think. You can have this home of your dreams right now without years of weary waiting. For the modern method of buying furniture lets you have it right away.

"THE SPY" - By A. D. MacCormick – There is story-interest in this colorful painting. The artist, born in Coleraine, Ireland, in 1860, is a member of the Royal Academy, the Royal Institute of Painters and is a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society. When thirty years old he accompanied the Sir Martin Conway expedition to the Himalaya Mountains as artist and five years later joined the Clinton T. Dent expedition to the Central Caucasian Mountains. On both these journeys he obtained much interesting material from landscapes and people.

DELICATE BITS OF CHINA.

These little China figures, but a few inches in height, are perfect in detail and quite charming in color. They were created by Royal Doulton in England and Pittsburgh has taken a lively interest in them. The beautiful figure on the left is entitled "Sweet and Twenty." The gallant figure in the center is called "The Proposal" and on the left is "The Perfect Pair."

"PORTRAIT OF MRS. SAMUEL HARDEN CHURCH."
By Leopold Seyffert.

"PORTRAIT OF SAMUEL HARDEN CHURCH."
By Sir William Orpen.

Right Orpen is probably the most distinguished portrait painter in Great Britain. His portraits are all done with great distinction and skill. This "Portrait of Samuel Harden Church", president of the Board of Trustees, Carnegie Institute, was painted in 1924 at the request of the Board of Trustees. The artist, born in Dublin, was awarded first prize at the Carnegie International in 1910.

"DOUARNENEZ"—By Hayley Lever This is a very colorful harbor scene, teeming with people and activities, and is shown in the 28th Carnegie Institute International Exhibition. Lever was born in Adelaide, South Australia, in 1876. He is member of the A. N. A., Royal British Artists, London; Royal Institute of Oil Painters, London; Royal West of England Academy, National Arts Club, New York; Whitney Studio Club, and New Society of Artists, New York. He is represented in many Museums and is well known to Pittsburghers.

Each year that amount of coal is moved on the rivers in the Pittsburgh district. From 75 miles up the Monongahela River, in "Six Pool", to 70 miles down the Ohio this volume of coal is handled on barges. The average barge holds 1,000 tons of coal.

"LANDSCAPE WITH INDIAN CAMP" — By Ernest L. Blumenschein Though born in Pittsburgh, in 1874, Mr. Blumenschein says, "I left it at the age of four, too soon to have it stamped on my art records." Studying the violin at the Cincinnati College of Music for some time Blumenschein turned to painting and became a pupil at the Art Students' League and Academy Julian, Paris. From 1896 to 1908 he illustrated for such magazines as Century, Scribner's, McClure's, Harper's, American and several book publishers. Since that time he has been painting portraits and Indian scenes of the Southwest. He is a member of the National Academy, the Salmagundi Club, The Society of Illustrators, the American Water Color Society, the American Art Association of Paris, the New Mexican Painters, the National Arts Club, and was president of the Taos (New Mexico) Society of Artists, 1921 to 1923. He has received numerous awards and is represented in many museums. He was also represented in the 22nd Carnegie International in 1923. The above painting is in the present International Exhibition, which will remain open to the public in the fine arts galleries of Carnegie Institute until next Sunday. This particular painting is beautiful in color, is very decorative, and Blumenschein has weighted his trees, giving one a sense of power of the forest in the Southwest.

WILDERNESS OF BEAUTY West Virginia offers some splendid scenic thrills to lure the visitor. This view of the gorge of New River at Hawk's Nest is in Fayette County, between Charleston and White Sulphur Springs.

"LADY IN KIMONO" By Karl Sterrer — Karl Sterrer is Professor of Painting at the School of Fine Arts, Vienna, Austria. He is widely represented in the Modern Museums of Vienna and in many private collections. Born in Vienna in 1885, he studied there and in 1908 received the Rome Award. For two and a half years he lived in Italy and then traveled in Spain, Southern France and Germany. In 1921 he became a member of the Academy of Vienna, where he is still teaching and working. The paintings on this page are all shown in the 28th Carnegie Institute International.

"EARLY AFTERNOON IN FIESOLE" By Baccio Maria Bacci This is one of the most pleasing canvases in the 28th International. It portrays a delightful scene in an Italian home just after lunch, when the family is still lingering about the table. There is a lot of good cheer and sunlight in the picture and the arrangement of the figures about the table is particularly good. Bacci is a young and well known Italian painter, famous for his frescoes for the church of Fiesole and the Convent of Assisi.

"IN THE STUDIO" By Howard Somerville Somerville's "Portrait of Miss Elissa Landi" was reproduced as the front page cover for the International special edition of the Sun-Telegraph color gravure October 20. This canvas is very delicately and skillfully painted. In addition to the figures in it, there is a degree of distinction in the painting of the still life in the artist's studio. Somerville was born in Dundee in 1873, and has lived in and worked in Dundee, Glasgow and New York City. At one time he drew for the English magazine "Punch."
